›-3 Ruling Seen as Blow to Prosecutor Indictment of Lawyer in Bribe Case s Sent to Queens District Attorney

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

Special to The New York Times

ıANY, June 3—The New State Court of Appeals, in ision certain to add fuel : political and legal con- sy surrounding Maurice djari, ruled today that his ction was limited "strict- the criminal-justice proc- system."

4-to-3 decision by the ; highest court is a major to Mr. Nadjari, who in ree and a half years as l state prosecutor has tently interpreted his jur- on to include conduct re- in any way to the en- nent of law.

the specific case before urt, a Queens lawyer had chargd with attempting to nce the testimony of a officer in a civil trial an automobile accident i witnessed.

court said the indictment l not be dismissed, since been handed up by a le- constituted grand jury. In- it ruled, the case should ed by the Queens District ıey, not by Mr. Nadjari, t said "was not author- o investigate and prose- cute acts relating to a purely civil action."

The decision—the first by the Court of Appeals on Mr. Nadjari's jurisdiction—throws into question several indictments obtained by Mr. Nadjari, including some that were brought against prominent judges and politicians.

The decision could mean that some Nadjari cases, including those against Justice Irving Saypol of State Supreme Court; the Manhattan Surrogate, S. Samuel DiFalco, and Carmine G. De Sapio, the for mer New York Decomratic leader, would have ti be transferred to Robert M. Morgenthau, the Manhattan District Attorney, who would presumably review the indictments before bringing them to trial.

None of the indicted men are directly involved with the criminal-justice system.

Neither Mr. Morgenthau — who had been scheduled to succeed Mr. Nadjari last December but withdrew his name after the special prosecutor's

HAYS WILL YIELD ONE POST, CLINGS TO THREE OTHERS

Plans to Quit Temporarily as Campaign Panel Head —Critics Not Placated

By RICHARD D. LYONS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—Representative Wayne L. Hays agreed today to give up temporarily one of his four committee chairmanships, but his attempt to placate his angry colleagues only ignited new demands that he step down from his other posts as well.

The Ohio Democrat told a news conference that he would ask next week that a temporary chairman be elected to replace him as head of the Democratic National Congressional Committee, which distributes campaign funds to House members seeking re-election.

But he refused to give up his other major source of power, the chairmanship of the House Administration Committee, saying merely that he would call a meeting next week to discuss with committee members "any questions concerning my role as chairman."

'Role as Chairman'

The reference to his "role as chairman" stems from statements made by Elizabeth Ray, a former secretary on the committee's staff, that Mr. Hays had put her on the payroll at a salary of $14,000 a year. She said that she did virtually no work for the committee, but was Mr. Hays's mistress.

Mr. Hays has said that he had an affair with Miss Ray, but insisted that she had worked as a secretary for the committee.

The news conference statement by Mr. Hays, who during his five-minute appearance seemed worn and dejected, failed to soothe the feelings of many of his colleagues who issued statements calling for his ouster from all of his chairmanships. The others are of the Joint Committee on Printing and the Subcommittee on International Operations of the International Relations Committee.

Mr. Hays said that his offer to cede the chairmanship "until the charge against me has been resolved"—a reference to complaints that he had been guilty of payroll padding—was only orgenthau Investigating easing of Day-Care Units

By PETER KIHSS

istrict Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau is investigating :y's direct leasing of day-care centers to determine if 's and city employees conspired to levy excessive charges in the controversial program.

In a parallel investigation, Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin has also been looking into the direct leasing of about 170 premises, for which the city is committed to pay a total of $300 million in periods up to 20 years. All told, the city currently finances 39 centers.

One source familiar with the Goldin inquiry said auditors were branding the leases as "one of the biggest giveaways in the history of the city."

Grand Jury Investigating

Mr. Morgenthau's responsibility is to determine and criminality. Comptroller Goldin is seeking bases for renegotiating the leases and is also investigating overall services rendered.

The District Attorney has borrowed 14 auditors and investigators from the State Department of Social Services, with his inquiries covering not only day care but also Medicaid and child-care programs, among the latter some for retarded children.

A grand jury has begun work in the Morgenthau investigation. One landlord, the Bayonne Holding Corporation, of which John Gurino is president, sought to quash a grand jury subpoena for company records, but has since turned them over

HUMPHREY READY IF CARTER FALTERS

Says He'll Probably Run if Georgian Does Badly in Primaries on Tuesday

By R. W. APPLE Jr.

Special to The New York Times

CHERRY HILL, N.J., June 3—Senator Hubert H. Humphrey said today that if Jimmy Carter stumbled badly in next Tuesday's three Presidential primaries, Mr. Humphrey would probably begin active pursuit of the Democratic nomination.

The Minnesota Senator said in an interview following a rousing speech to a labor group here that he would end his posture of noncandidacy only if he were convinced that Mr. Carter had fewer than 1,200 to 1,300 delegates of the 1,505 needed for nomination "really solidly nailed down."

According to The New York Times's tabulation, the former Georgia Governor already has 905 delegates publicly committed to him, and he is believed to have about 75 more coming as a result of private pledges and delegate-selection processes that are partly complete. Thus he would have to be held to fewer than 200 in Tuesday's final primaries if he is not to approach Mr. Humphrey's lower figure.

"He's very close," the Senator said of Mr. Carter. "But I

Carter Warns Democrats On Promises in Platform

By CHARLES MOHR

Special to The New York Times

CLEVELAND, June 3—Jimmy Carter warned today that the Democratic Party should not adopt a "wish box or Christmas tree" party platform, filled with what he characterized as excessively costly and unrealistic promises.

Mr. Carter, the front-runner for the Democratic Presidential nomination, volunteered the remarks at a news conference this morning, saying the nature of the party platform was of "great concern to me."

The remarks may evoke new criticisms from those in the left wing of the party who feel the former Georgia Governor has no wholehearted commitment to liberal principles.

It may also permit the splintered "stop Carter movement" to wage a symbolic fight over the platform at the national convention in July in the hope of eroding his strength in subsequent balloting for the nomination.

The Democratic Platform Committee finished hearing four days of testimony on May 20. The drafting subcommittee will meet in Washington from June 11 through 13. The full committee will then begin consideration of a draft on June 14, in line with party reforms that call for adequate precon- vention consideration by delegates of a proposed platform.

Mr. Carter said early last month that he reserved the right to reject or to embrace planks in the platform if he became the nominee.

But today he said the platform represented "the word of the Democratic Party" and should be written with the same "sense of responsibility as a budget," adding, "I want to be sure people are not misled by promises that can't be kept."

HUAMBO, Angola, June 3—Cuban troops, who are assisting the Angolan Government forces, made preparations here today for what appeared to be a new offensive against guerrillas said to belong to the opposition National Union for the Total Independence of Angola.

Guerrilla attacks have increased in the last few weeks to the north and to the east of this city, which once served as capital for the National Union, or Unita, as the Western-supported movement is generally known.

Most of the attacks have been directed against the Benguela

KISSINGER TO MEET VORSTER IN EUROPE

To Talk With South African as Part of Drive for End to White Rhodesia Rule

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will meet in Europe later this month with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa as part of the Ford Administration's new policy of working for an end to white minority rule in Rhodesia.

Administration officials said that the meeting, the first between a high-level American official and the South African leader, was discussed this afternoon when Mr. Kissinger conferred at the State Department with the South African Ambassador, R. F. Botha.

This was the second time in a month that Mr. Kissinger had met Mr. Botha after having snubbed him since the Ambassador arrived here last September.

Plans European Trip

Officials would not provide details of the coming meeting with Mr. Vorster except to say that it would be somewhere in Europe during the week of June 20, when Mr. Kissinger plans to be in Paris and London.

Mr. Kissinger will attend a meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development in Paris on June 21 and 22 and is to make a speech in London on June 25. The meeting with Mr. Vorster will take place on June 23 or 24, officials said.

Because of South Africa's unswerving policy of apartheid, or legalized separation of the races, Mr. Kissinger's decision

The Egyptian criticism o... Syrian intervention was ... letter from Mr. Fahmy to Ma... moud Riad, secretary gener... of the Arab League. The letter broke a two-day silence by Egypt on the entry of Syrian troops and tanks into Lebanon.

'Cancerous Symptom'

Mr. Fahmy condemned the Syrian action as "a cancerous symptom eating away at Lebanon" and charged it "was in concordance with Israeli goals and plans." He accused Syria of preparing "bloody butcheries that are in reality a war of genocide."

The letter reiterated Egyptian calls for the Lebanese to be left alone to sort out their differencies.

"There is no replacement for joint Arab action that would transform the provocations and the fighting into a dialogue governed by logic between Lebanese parties to the conflict," Mr. Fahmy said.

A Feud Over Sinai Pact

Syria and Egypt have been feuding since last September, when Egypt signed an agreement with Israel on a disengagement of forces in the Sinai Peninsula.

Foreign ministers from Saudi Arabia and Kuwait arrived in Cairo on Tuesday, the day Syria sent troops and tanks into Lebanon, to try to patch up Egyptian-Syrian relations. The foreign ministers left yesterday without any sign of progress.

Earlier today, Arab students occupied the Syrian Embassy in Cairo for several hours and other Arabs demonstrated in front of the Syrian Embassy in Moscow.

An estimated 300 students, including some Palestinians, took over the embassy in Cairo for about three hours before

"It seems an internal situation that could happen on any street and any place," explained John Purdy, whose house is a few hundred yards away and whose views were echoed by other neighbors and by people throughout this town of 60,000 persons.

Picasso's Art by Picasso Is Valued at $260 Million

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, June 3—Pablo Picasso's collection of his own works, among them 1,185 paintings, has been valued by experts after more than a year's study at $260 million.

The figure was disclosed during a court hearing on a petition by the artist's 24-year-old granddaughter, Marina, one of his six heirs, for a renegotiation of an agreement on dividing the Picasso estate.

Besides the art collection, the estate includes two residences, two castles and Picasso's bank account. Some reports placed the value of these additional assets at $750 million.

If correct, the total estate would be valued at $1.01 billion, or close to the $1.1 billion figure reported last December as an unofficial estimate. Both figures are far higher than the estimates made soon after Picasso's death in April 1973, when the value of the estate was put at $40 million.

The art valuations disclosed today were established by a team of eight experts who worked for a year and a half under the supervision of Maurice Rheims, a leading French auctioneer and art historian, who was recently admitted to the French Academy.

The 1,185 paintings that Picasso owned were valued at $160 million. The experts

Beirut Tense and Fearful As People Expect Syrians

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, June 3—This Lebanese capital, more frightened than ever, its streets empty and garbage burning at every second corner, seemed today to be waiting for an enemy who did not come.

In Beirut's Moslem-controlled area, virtually the entire population remained indoors and out of sight.

A general strike called by the leftist-Moslem alliance in protest against the Syrian military intervention in eastern and northern Lebanon was nearly 100 percent effective.

Stores, groceries and even sidewalk stands and money changers, who are among the hardiest businessmen here, were closed. Only bakeries were open and outside were block-long lines of customers.

Roadblocks with armed men from the many leftist-Moslem militias, grimmer than usual, stopped traffic. Only the most persuasive drivers producing special passes from the various Moslem organizations were permitted to proceed.

Syrians Hold Their Positions

Meanwhile, the Syrian Army, which is regarded as the enemy by the Lebanese leftist and Moslem parties and the Palestinians, consolidated and expanded the positions it took Tuesday in eastern Lebanon as part of an apparent attempt to end the 14-month Lebanese civil war. But its troops in the area remained about 20 miles from the capital, making no significant advances toward it.

Four times in the morning pairs of military jets came streaking out of the northeast, swept over Beirut in a steep left turn toward the airport and disappeared to the east.

They were identified by military experts as Soviet-built MIG's of the Syrian Air Force.

Syrian broadcasts said the planes were Lebanese Air Force craft flown by Lebanese pilots who had remained neutral during the civil war.]

Sabra, the Palestinian refugee camp on the southern edge of Beirut, was close to the hub of the turn made by each of the formations, prompting Palestinian officials to say later that the planes had "circled" Sabra.

Even if this was not literally the case the meaning of the Syrian flights seemed clear to all.

A Lebanese journalist observed: "The Syrians are telling the Palestinians, 'We have planes and we can find your camps, your offices and your military positions on the map.'"

He added that the Syrian Army thus did not have to come to Beirut to put direct military pressure on those who have vowed to fight it.

The Lebanese Air Force, whose pilots are mostly Christians, has not intervened in the 14 month-old civil war, except for a single strafing action in January. Its two main bases in eastern and northern Lebanon, are in Syrian hands.

The Palestinian leaders fear that the main purpose of the Syrian intervention is to bring the Palestine Liberation Organization under Syrian military control so that Damascus will have a free hand to negotiate with Israel through United States mediation.

Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian leader, stated this view yesterday in an address to a foreign minister of so-called nonaligned countries meeting in Algiers. His speech was distributed here by Wafa, the Palestinian press service.

No Electricity in City

Beirut and its suburbs have been without electricity since last night.

For the last few months, the capital and most of the country have been supplied by a single power line, the last of 11 that existed a year ago.

Yesterday, this last line was reported severed by shells just above Kahale, a front-line village on the Damascus road in the steep hills east of Beirut. But most Lebanese politicians on the Moslem side are said to believe that the power was deliberately cut by the Syrians or by pro-Syrian elements, to increase pressure on the city.

In the past, power cuts were limited to a few hours at a time, often announced in advance as a measure to preserve fuel or permit repairs. This time, the cut appears indefinite.

The radio stations and newspapers carried an announcement this morning that power would continue to be supplied to hospitals and radio stations. Water will be pumped and an effort will be made to supply energy to bakeries, the announcement said.

Above Kahale, the Damascus road is in Moslem and Palestinian hands up to Dahr al-Baidar, the mountain pass leading to the Bekaa Valley. The Syrian Army is east of the pass.

By today it had still not made any attempt to break through the Palestinian and leftist-Moslem defensive positions at the pass.

Reports from southern Lebanon said that the Syrians likewise had not moved on the port of Saida, the only major port controlled by the Palestinians. The port of Beirut is a frontline wasteland. Tripoli, the country's second port, is controlled by Syria.

However, witnesses in the area reported that Syrian soldiers posing as members of As Saiqa, the Syrian-controlled Palestinian guerrilla group, had reinforced their positions near Saida and the nearby major oil refinery.

As Saiqa forces are reliably reported to have strengthened their positions in strategic mountain positions east of Saida, where a secondary highway leads to the Lebanese-Syrian border.

It is commonly accepted here that the majority of the 7,000 As Saiqa members in Lebanon are Syrian soldiers.

PARIS, June 3 (UPI)—F Minister Jean Sauvagn today met with the Syria eign Minister and re France's offer to send keeping troops to Leba preserve the country's rity and independence."

Syria's broadcasts and newspapers have fallen short of announcing that Syrian forces are operating in Lebanon. But great official emphasis is being put on the appearance of what is described as "the avant-garde of the Lebanese Army" in the Bekaa Valley of eastern Lebanon, where Syrian forces are in their largest strength.

According to one Western diplomatic informant, the "nucleus of the future Lebanese Army," as it is being called, contains Lebanese Air Force officers who remained neutral when the armed forces splintered along Moslem-Christian lines in February.

The Syrians are in control of the main Lebanese Air Force base at Riyaq in the Bekaa Valley and today the Syrian press agency reported that "Lebanese planes belonging to the avant-garde" flew over sites in Lebanon, the agency denied reports that Syrian MIG-23's had flown over Beirut.

The Damascus party daily, Al Baath declared that the "avant-garde" organization "will be able to liquidate all the political skeletons, origin of the Lebanese agony, and close all the political boutiques that have been trading on Lebanon, Arab destiny and the Palestinian resistance."

Appeals to Assad Reported

A television commentator spent many minutes reading the names of families in Beirut who are said to have appealed to President Hafez al-Assad to end the bloodshed in the Lebanese capital.

But visitors to the Bekka Valley today found no evidence of the kind of major military buildup that would seem required to mount a move on Beirut, about 20 miles away.

No attempt will be made to capture a creature or do anything that might bring harm to them.

Dr. Harold E. Edgerton and three other members of the party put out from Temple Pier in a 10-foot rowboat with a small outboard motor. They made a quick-look sonar survey in the vicinity of Urquhart Bay, partly to test one of the expedition's sonar instruments but also to get a feeling for the bottom topography of the Loch in the primary search area.

At 73 years of age, Dr. Edgerton is the senior member of the expedition but as vigorous as a man half his age. He is an emeritus professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, a member of the National Academy of Sciences and winner of many awards for his work in the technology of photography. His invention of the stroboscope in 1931 is the basis for today's strobe flash photography, which has made possible ultra-high-speed and deep underwater photography.

Everyone in the expedition calls him Doc. He is cheerful and chatty, full of stories of his photographic experiences around the world, up in the air and deep at sea, all told in the soft down-home accent of his native Nebraska.

When he saw a couple of children near the pier, Dr. Edgerton went over and handed them color postcard photographs of a bullet ripping through an apple. He had taken the picture to demonstrate the virtues of his high-speed photographic technology.

This is how we make applesauce in America," he told the children with a smile.

Recorded Sonar Signals

Once under way in the small boat, Dr. Edgerton hunched over the Oceanographic Recorder, an instrument the size of a large suitcase that was set on the seat in front of him. It recorded the reflected sonar signals on a slowly unrolling sheet of flimsy paper. The traces showed the depth immediately beneath the boat, as determined by a precise measurement of the time it takes a sound signal to reach the bottom and be reflected back to the sonar receiver.

At the orange buoy marking the site for the expedition's photographic search, the recorder showed a depth of slightly more than 60 feet. The array of six still, time-lapse and television cameras is to be lowered to 40 feet. The site is about 300 feet out in Urquhart Bay, where it is assumed the creatures feed on salmon waiting to swim into tributaries to spawn.

Dr. Christopher McGowan, a zoologist from the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto, looked over Dr. Edgerton's shoulder at the sonar tracings. He had a keen interest because he plans to conduct a sonar research for signs of skeletal remains of the creatures.

As the boat headed out for the middle of the loch, the depth increased precipitously, from 60 to 100 to 700 feet out in the middle. Loch Ness is, by volume, the largest lake in the British Isles. It is 23 miles long, more than a mile wide and in some places more than 900 feet deep.

The loch's steep bottom slopes are the result of a crack in the earth's surface, or a fault, that is responsible for the Great Glen, a spectacular 100-mile rift valley stretching across the Scottish Highlands from the Moray Firth in the northeast to the Firth of Lorne in the southwest. This has made possible, through a series of rivers, lakes and canals, a water link between the North Sea and the Atlantic Ocean.

Out in the deeper waters, the sonar signals got fuzzy. Dr. Edgerton decided that the noise from the outboard motor was the problem.

So Jeffrey Thomason, a 22-year-old zoology graduate of Cambridge University, cut off the motor and moved forward to pick up the oars. He was the youngest and strongest and had had some experience in competitive rowing while at Cambridge. Dr. Edgerton encouraged him with a deep-throated rendition of "song of the Volga Boatmen."

My task was less technical than Dr. Edgerton's and less strenuous than Jeff Thomson's. It was more in the manner of the old-time leadsman, who stood on the deck of a ship and cast a lead-weighted hemp line overboard to sound the depth by counting the measured knots in the paid-out line, once the weight had hit bottom, he could make a rough estimate of depth and detect dangerous shoals.

The leadsman has given way to sonar, or echo sounding. On modern ships the sonar sending and receiving instrument is built into the hull or, on research ships using the more advanced side-scan sonar, a torpedolike "fish" is attached by cable from the stern.

'Seeing New Worlds'

But there I sat, and sometimes knelt, at the bow of our rowboat, holding tight the lines leading to the sonar transducer, which was suspended three feet under water. It was necessary to keep it as level as possible. This was the instrument, two rubber-coated, bell-shaped devices in a wood frame, that sent and received the signals that were then processed and recorded by the instrument that Dr. Edgerton was operating.

"Every time I go out with this thing," Dr. Edgerton was saying, "I feel like Columbus or Magellan or somebody like that. I'm seeing new worlds, where no one has been. These records are important, because I begin to know what I'm dealing with, what kind of place the bottom of Loch Ness really is."

Later in the expedition, more advanced sonar surveys are to be conducted, using larger boats where motor noise should not be a problem. The chief sonar expert of the expedition, Martin Klein of Salem, N. H., is expected to arrive next week.

While we were out in the rowboat, Dr. Robert H. Rines, the expedition leader, and Charles W. Wyckoff deployed cables from the pier out to the buoy. The cables will supply electric power for the underwater cameras and lights and provide a link between the underwater television camera and a monitoring station on the shore. In this way, the expedition hopes to conduct the first 24-hour reconnaissance of life deep in Urquhart Bay.

Work in the Gloaming

By then it was time for a dinner break. But at this time of year in the latitudes of the Highlands, it does not get really dark until just before midnight and the light returns shortly after 3 A.M.

So, in the gloaming, the expedition resumed work at 9 P.M.

Dr. Rines and Mr. Wyckoff rowed out to the buoy marking the exploration site. They took the 16-millimeter elapsed-time camera and its 100-watt-second strobe light with them. Each was enclosed in plastic cylinders less than two feet long and attached to a steel frame, the light placed five feet above the camera.

The system, developed by Dr. Edgerton, was hooked to the electric cable and lowered into the bay for an overnight test run. It was secured by lines to a moored rubber boat. When full operations begin, this and the other cameras will be suspended from a larger boat.

More Ambitious Search

The camera is the same one that took pictures in 1972 and 1975 that appeared to show a living, moving creature in much the same part of Loch Ness. Those pictures, when refined and analyzed, set in motion this summer's more ambitious search.

When Mr. Wyckoff returned this morning, he found that the camera had apparently performed flawlessly. It shot 2,000 colored exposures, one every 15 seconds in unison with the intense flashes of the strobe light.

The film from the test will not be developed for another few days, when a processing laboratory is established at Lochside. Only then will it be known if a creature showed up for the test.

Dr. Rines, the leader of the expedition, reported today that all preparations were proceeding on schedule, with search operations expected to begin early next week, or perhaps sooner.

Poet Slain by Francoists Stirs New Dispute in S

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times

GRANADA, Spain, June 1 — The ghost of Federico García Lorca, the poet slain by Franco forces in 1936 shortly after the outbreak of the Civil War and since then the symbol of all the voices stilled in Spain, is haunting his native region, Andalusia, now that some Spaniards find their voice once more.

Four decades after his death before a firing squad in a ravine and his burial in a grave never known, Federico, as he is called by admirers, has become the issue in a dispute between the opposition and the representatives of the power that survived Francisco Franco's death last November.

The controversy illuminates the tension throughout the intellectual centers of Spain in this period of transition, as voices long muted challenge the reign of silence and the men in power seek a response that will blunt the challenge.

A Professor's Proposal

The issue was opened last January by Prof. José Cazorla, a political sociologist at the University of Granada, in a letter to a local newspaper. He urged that García Lorca's native region pay homage to him in the 40th year of his "assassination"—a word unthinkable in this context while Franco was alive.

Dr. Cazorla received letters and telephone calls of support and of menace, including one call that threatened him with García Lorca's fate. A committee was formed and a call issued for a public homage to the poet on June 5, the day that would have been his 78th birthday, in his native village of Fuente Vaqueros, about 15 miles from here.

In a forthright but delicately worded appeal for support, the organizers, who signed their names despite the risk that their committee might be declared illegal, stated:

"It is our intention to break forever a silence enforced until today and to proclaim, with the force of solidarity, a manifesto of reconciliation, which will permit us to construct the Spain of everybody and for all Spaniards."

6,500 Signatures

Dr. Cazorla said that 6,500 signatures had been received on the document, copies of which are circulating widely. On April 25 the committee made public its plan for Saturday's homage.

What followed is what Professor Cazorla called "a picaresque situation,' events that cover the serious issues in a cloak of rustic comedy.

For 40 years the authorities had nearly obscured the fact that Fuente Vaqueros was the home of García Lorca—totally ignoring it for about the first 30, then gradually allowing memory to revive until last year, on highway signs half devoted to Coca-Cola, the village advertised itself as the "cradle of García Lorca." Now, on May 16, they announced a first official ceremony.

They said that a plaque would be put up at the house of the poet's birth and that the street on which it stands would be renamed for him.

The date chosen for that ceremony was last Thursday, nine days before the planned unofficial homage. From Madrid, the poet's sister, sister-in-law and nephews issued a strong rejection of the official ceremony.

"We have always opposed, and will oppose in the future," the family declared, "the desire of official agencies and persons holding offices neither elected nor representative to 'credit to their account' or 'take part' in acts of homage to our brother and uncle after 40 years of covering up a political murder (among many)."

García Lorca, who belonged to no political party, was killed in the early waves of summary executions by the Falange of real or imagined opponents of Franco's military uprising. The victims ranged from anarchists and Communists through Socialists to those of generally liberal sentiment, like the poet.

A son of a small landholder, García Lorca drew his inspiration and much of the subject matter of his poems and dramas from Andalusian peasant life. His sympathies were deeply stirred by the plight of the poor and those exploited by a feudalistic land-tenure system and by those relegated to the margin of society, like southern Spain's many gypsies.

Formed Touring Theater

He gave substance to his social views, and his idea of the artist's role in society, by forming a theater group, La Barraca, with which he toured through Spain in a truck, bringing the classics of drama to people who would never have the occasion to go to a traditional theater.

The official ceremony in Fuente Vaqueros took place, on a day apparently chosen at random. "The wrong day," said Prof. Juan Antonio Rivas López, who teaches English at the University of Granada and is a member of the unofficial organizing committee.

A hastily prepared ceramic plaque now decorates the simple two-story building in the sleepy farming center. It says in faulty Spanish, omitting such sensitive issues as the telltale date of death:

"The municipality of Fuente Vaqueros to the renowned poet Federico García Lorca, glory of Spanish letters, who was born in this house, whose painful loss is felt by the sons of his town."

Mayor José López Espigares and Jaime Cerezuela, the town clerk, were embarrassed in an interview at the town office when asked why Fuente Vaqueros had waited 40 years to give such recognition to García Lorca and why it had done so nine days before the obvious date.

They shrugged and exchanged glances, sitting at a desk under a crucifix and a photograph of Franco.

"What can we think?" said the Mayor, a small farmer like most of the people of Fuente Vaqueros. "A death that occurred that should not have occurred, but there were so many."

"Those are the circumstances of life," said the town clerk. He explained the choice of date by saying that it was Ascension Day, a Roman Catholic holiday. "This is a totally agricultural town, and the people work all the other days."

Few People Attend

Even on the holiday, few people attended, according to local sources. They said that many carloads of policemen and officials from throughout the region outnumbered the people of the village who attended.

The clerk took from a file a petition, which he said was spontaneous, in which a group of villagers asked the Mayor to hold a ceremony in opposition to the unofficial homage.

"We consider it not right that while other people take initiatives, his countrymen remain indifferent or at least passive," the petition said.

A politically uncommitted shopkeeper, asked whether he had been among the signers, said scoffingly that only "the crowd around town hall" had signed.

Praise for the Poet

Both town officials expressed great admiration for the poet. But a schoolgirl in her teens, when asked what she had learned of García Lorca in the Fuente Vaqueros school, replied, "Very little."

"Nothing," a companion added.

The higher the provincial officials questioned in Granada, the higher the praise of the poet. They included the civil governor, Madrid's highest representative in the province, José Manuel Menéndez-Manjón y Sancho Miñano, and the president of the highest provincial administrative body, the Deputation, José Luis Pérez Serrabona.

The poet was praised also by an elderly, burly shopowner here who admits being an "official" of the Francoist Falange in town in the days of García Lorca's arrest and his killing three days later, but the shopowner denied allegations that he had direct knowledge.

The death certificate said that the poet "died in the month of August of 1936 as the result of injuries produced by facts of war."

"The body was found on the 20th of the same month on the road from Viznar to Alfacar," it said.

A Shared Martyrdom

The mountain region of Viznar and Alfacar, a few miles from here in the shadow of the snowy Sierra Nevada, bears no trace of the martyrdom that García Lorca shared with many. All is sunshine, wild flowers, Moorish canals winding through olive groves and mountain goats hopping. The houses where the Falangist executioners and their victims stayed have reverted to private use.

Pine trees planted in the late 1950's cover the mounds, no longer visible, where the dead were buried all over the hillside and ravines. Near the supposed site of García Lorca's death and burial a modern, high-rise building welcomes Falange women on holiday. Villas have risen on supposed gravesites.

The dead of the early period of Franco's rule in Granada are estimated at upward of 6,000.

The poet's family, echoed by intellectuals throughout Spain, has demanded an inquiry into the circumstances of his death. The demands were rejected by all officials questioned here.

'So Many Others'—

The governor, who at first declined to be interviewed and then said that he could make no official comment, said: "The death of Lorca was painful to everyone. He is a symbol, but there are so many others."

"I expect that the authorities of the period must have investigated the circumstances," the president of the provincial Deputation said. "Now is not the moment.

"The people of Granada are interested in the works of Lorca, but the circumstances of his death are just one more incident in his life. Knowing the manner of his death will throw no light on his work. The are trying t happened in

Juan Carlos Opens Bicentennial Displays

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—King Juan Carlos I and Queen Sofia of Spain spent most of today in ceremonies presenting Bicentennial gifts and opening Bicentennial exhibitions.

This morning, the King and Queen opened a Christopher Columbus exhibition at the Smithsonian Institution's Museum of History and Technology.

The display, drawing on treasures of a number of Spanish museums, includes the first letter written by Columbus from the Americas, dated Jan. 4, 1493; books carried by Columbus on his voyages; portraits of him and of Queen Isabella, his protector; cannon, armor, shields, jewels and a map drawn in 1500 showing the Americas.

Associated Press
King Juan Carlos I of Spain passes the honor guard as he arrives at Arlington National Cemetery to place a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns. Maj. Gen. Robert Yerks, Washington army commander, is at right.

Then the King and Queen dedicated an equestrian statue of Bernardo Galvéz, who led 2,000 Spanish soldiers in American revolutionary victories over the British in western Florida in 1781. The statue, by Juan de Aválos, stands on an open block in front of the State Department.

Unveil Quixote Statue

In the afternoon, the royal couple attended the unveiling of a 60-ton statue of Don Quixote, the hero of the Cervantes novel, in front of the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. It was designed by Arelio Téno.

Queen Sofia also attended the opening of an exhibition at the National Geographic Society of gold and silver ingots raised from the Spanish galleon Nuestra Señora de Atacha, which sank off Florida in 1622.

At a luncheon given for the couple by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, still another Spanish gift was presented, a bust of Don Diego Gardoqui, who was Spain's first envoy to the United States, serving here from 1785 to 1789. Gardoqui had been instrumental in channeling Spanish funds and arms to American revolutionaries. The bust is by Louis Antonio Sanguino.

Talks of Ties With Israel

Juan Carlos also met with various groups of Americans during the day, including representatives of the American Jewish Committee. He was reported to have told the 10 Jewish representatives that Spain would give consideration to opening diplomatic ties with Israel.

This evening, President and Mrs. Ford were invited to a royal dinner given by the King and Queen at the Spanish Embassy residence. The visitors will fly to New York tomorrow.

SOVIET DISSIDENT ALLOWED TO LEAVE

Rubin, an Expert on Ancient China, to Go to Israel

By DAVID K. SHIPLER
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, June 3—Vitali Rubin, Soviet dissident and a specialist in ancient Chinese philosophy, said today that he had been granted permission to emigrate to Israel after a wait of more than four years.

"It will be very strange," he said, "to stand on the soil of a free country—I never have."

Mr. Rubin is the most prominent Jewish activist to receive an exit visa since Aleksandr Lunts, a mathematician, was allowed to leave last February. Many others, however, remain barred from departing, including Aleksandr Learner and Viktor Brailovsky, both mathematicians, and Venyamin Levich, a physical chemist who is a member of the Academy of Sciences.

Just as unsuccessul applicants are rarely given official reasons for the denials, Mr. Rubin and his wife, Inessa, a teacher of German, received no explanation for the sudden decision to let them go. They were told today to leave within two weeks, Mr. Rubin said, and officials have cut through some red tape to speed their departure.

He speculated that the authorities considered him an increased liability since he joined eight other dissidents three weeks ago in a group to monitor Soviet compliance with the Helsinki declaration's provision on human rights.

Mr. Rubin's reasons for leaving are a blend of religious identity and political compunction. At 52 years of age, he is one of Moscow's sharpest critics of the Soviet Union.

In 1971, while he was a senior researcher at the Institute of Oriental Studies, Mr. Rubin wrote a book entitled, "Ideology and Culture in Ancient China."

"I think it was published by mistake," he said. "The editors got a dressing-down. The main point was an analysis of totalitarian ideology in ancient China, and Soviet intellectuals saw in this a mirror of present Soviet practices." The book was denounced as anti-Marxist.

After he decided to apply for a visa, he said, he and his wife were dismissed from their jobs. Since then they have been living on contributions from abroad and earnings from odd jobs. Mrs. Rubin has some private students of German, and Mr. Rubin has done some translating and writing for other scholars.

They plan to live in Israel, where he has been offered a teaching post at Hebrew University, but they also hope to spend some time in the United States. Columbia University has invited him to lecture, and Harvard's East Asian Research Center has asked him to participate in a conference in August, he said.

Kissinger to Meet With Vorster As Part of Effort on Rhodesia

to meet with Mr. Vorster may raise questions among liberals on Capitol Hill and elsewhere.

But Senator Dick Clark, Democrat of Iowa and chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee's African subcommittee, said today that he would not oppose the meeting if it helped bring pressure on Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia to negotiate an end to minority rule.

Mr. Vorster's Government has been working to reconcile Rhodesia's leaders with its black African nationalists, but the failure of the South African mediation so far has produced a strain in relations between the two white governments.

Condemned Apartheid

On his recent African trip, Mr. Kissinger strongly condemned South Africa's apartheid policy, but he said that "no one—including the leaders of black Africa—challenges the right of white South Africans to live in their country."

He said that while in Rhodesia the United States would bring "unrelenting pressure" for an end to the white minority rule in Rhodesia Washington would work for a "clear evolution toward equality of opportunity and basic human rights for all South Africans."

He said that in the immediate future South Africa could show its dedication to Africa "by using its influence in Salisbury to promote a rapid negotiated settlement for majority rule in Rhodesia."

The Kissinger speech at first was widely criticized in South Africa, but more recently political leaders there have talked about using the American interest in cooperating on Rhodesia as a way of ending South Africa's political isolation in the West.

Mr. Kissinger has a busy travel schedule. Tomorrow night he goes to New York for a private dinner, and he meets on Saturday morning with Secretary General Kurt Waldheim of the United Nations for a review of world issues, including Cyprus, the Middle East and Africa. He leaves on Sunday for a week-long trip to Latin America, where he will participate in the meeting of the Organization of American States in Santiago, Chile.

Soviet Airliner Is Missing On a Flight From Angola

MOSCOW, June 3 (AP)—An Aeroflot jetliner has been missing for two days on a flight from Angola to Moscow, a Soviet aviation official said today.

The TU-154 failed to arrive Tuesday at Malabo, Equatorial Guinea, the official said. He refused to say how many persons were aboard or what countries they were from.

A TU-154 can carry 128 to 167 passengers. The Luanda-Moscow flight was started earlier this year after the Soviet-supported Popular Front for the Liberation of Angola took over the country.

The 18-hour flight is mainly used by Soviet military and civilian advisers and by Angolans traveling to and from the Soviet Union.

Italian Communist Chief, in Paris, Pessimistic on Election

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, June 3—The Italian Communist leader, Enrico Berlinguer, here for a huge rally of French Communists, said today that he would not advise betting that the rival Christian Democrats would be defeated in the coming Italian elections.

Mr. Berlinguer told a small group of reporters at the Hilton Hotel, where he is staying, that information he has been receiving from all over Italy shows the dominant Christian Democrats regaining strength. The surprisingly pessimistic prediction from a politician little more than two weeks before what he called "most important elections" was not explained, and Italian reporters were puzzled by it.

As part of his quick trip to France for the rally tonight, Mr. Berlinguer visited Italian émigrés here last night, and he and the French Communist leader, Georges Marchais, appealed for all Italians working in France and other European countries to vote for the Communists. There are 565,000 Italian workers in France.

To Dramatize Links

But the main purpose of Mr. Berlinguers trip was to dramatize the links between the French and Italian Communist Parties, the strongest outside Communist-ruled countries. Mr. Marchais had appeared at an Italian Communist rally in Bologna in 1973, and last November the two parties issued a joint communiqué noting their differences "because of different circumstances in the two countries" but pledging common support for democratic freedoms.

Since then, the divergences have become more evident again, not only on domestic politics but also on attitudes toward the Soviet Union. This was reflected in the two leaders' speeches at the rally tonight, although each stressed common goals and called for solidarity.

Mr. Berlinguer said that while his party "did not invent the phrase Euro-Communism," its increasing use showed the expectations of people in the West and "the peculiar characteristics that socialism must have in countries such as ours."

A Distinct Approach

The phrase "EuroCommunism" is meant to suggest that Western nations can evolve a new approach to Communism distinct from that of the East bloc or developing countries. The Italian Communists support the Common Market and the proposal for direct elections to a European Parliament, which Mr. Marchais has called a "crime against France."

The Italian also said that while his party recognized the historical role of the Bolshevik Revolution, "the society that developed in the Soviet Union and in Eastern Europe after World War II has aspects which we consider critically or which are not applicable in countries like ours."

Praise for Soviet

Mr. Marchais had only praise for the Soviet Union in his speech, mentioning its efforts for détente and peaceful coexistence. He repeated the French Communists' support for "proletarian internationalism," which he said means mutual support among Communists everywhere.

Mr. Berlinguer spoke of his party's "internationalist spirit," but he stressed the need for each national party to follow "its own road" to socialism.

The physical differences between the two men symbolized the differing positions their parties take despite their special association in the Communist world.

Mr. Berlinguer, an intellectual from a well-to-do Sardinian family, is a man of slim elegance. He waves his long, narrow hands in expressive gestures and answers embarrassing questions with witty remarks and a relaxed smile.

Mr. Marchais, a stocky former metalworker, has a rough-cut face and a ski-jump nose, blazing eyes and a tough stance. His ripostes are blunt and combative.

The French Communists gave Mr. Berlinguer a rousing reception at the rally. But their applause came mostly when he spoke of the Communists' will to share power. They were tepid or silent wh from French doc that Communist not come only fr immediate interes placed a valuation of $20 million on 7,089 drawings and a similar figure on 1,228 sculptures.

Picasso's Collection of Picassos Is Evaluated at $260 Million

They ilsted 3,222 ceramics at $2.5 million, 1,723 engraved plates and 17,411 prints at $12 million and 9,931 litho and lino engravings at $10 million.

The remaining art consisted of Picasso tapestries and carpets.

The six heirs have been reported to be ready to put much of the artist's collection at the disposal of a Picasso museum in Paris if the government is willing to make a suitable building available for that purpose.

The heirs included Picasso's second wife, Jacqueline, and his grandchildren Marina and Bernard, whose father, the late Paulo Picasso, was the artist's son from his first marriage to the Russian dancer Olga Khoklova.

The three other heirs are children from two nonmarital relationships—Claude and Paloma Ruiz-Picasso and Maya Widmaier. All three had fought for and obtained legal rights to a part of the estate following picasso's death.

Lawyers for each of the six parties recently reached agreemnt on how to divide it. The court proceeding, at Grasse on the French Riviera, resulted from one heir's charge, in a change of mind, that the agreement was "iniquitous." The petition sought a change in executor.

The court gave itself 10 days to reach a decision.

On the question of what works were in the Picasso collection, Werner Spies, professor of 20th-century art from Düsseldorf University who did the comprehensive catalogue of Picasso sculpture and was one of the last persons received by the painter in his lifetime, said that the real sensation would be the Picasso sculptures.

The reason, he said, is that Picasso had kept all but "a handful" of his sculptures, and his collection includes his important metal sculptures from the late 1920's and early 30's.

Another art expert who asked not to be quoted by name, said the Picasso estate included a key painting not only in Piccaso's own production but also in that of all of modern art history. This was his earliest collage, an oval work vital to the development of Cubism.

Other important works, the expert said, were various portraits of members of his family dating from the 1920's, as well as an extraordinary Crucifixion from the early 1930's in a style described as "expressionistic surrealism."

The residences included in the estate are the one at Mougins, where he died, and another at Cannes. Picasso had also acquired the castle of Vauvenargues in southern France and of Bosgelas in the northern part of the country, for the most part, to store his art as well as other belongings.

Picasso kept everything from art to newspapers to pieces of string because "it just might serve one day."

An American art collector who owns a Picasso shrugged tonight on hearing the news of the valuation and said, "Two-hundred-and-sixty-million dollars is not what it used to be."

Several Administration officials said that Mr. Brown was a well-established China analyst and that as far as they knew he was still working on matters related to China. They suggested that the agency must be under heavy criticism for allowing the publication of the article and that it was now attempting to put distance between itself and Mr. Brown.

Placed in Alarmist

The dispute is not over whether the United States should now be engaged in negotiations on the full normalization of relations with China, including the dissolution of the American mutual defense treaty with Taiwan. The experts have been virtually unanimous in recommending that these talks get underway. Their latest effort to bring this about failed last summer after the capture of Saigon and with the Presidential elections looming.

Rather, the debate occurs over more specific issues about which the analysts have little hard evidence: is foreign policy a major factor in the recurring struggles for power in Peking? If it is, does the opening to the West depend on Mr. Mao and his well-known distrust of Moscow? If, as seems likely to most analysts, Mr. Mao dies before the end of the year, should the United States move urgently to settle the Taiwan issue and perhaps establish some kind of military relationship with China? If China after Mao is to move away from Washington, how far might it move toward Moscow?

Mr. Brown's article, according to Administration officials, places him squarely in the most alarmist group of experts about the future of Chinese-American relations. His school of thought, however, looked valid recently when the dominant group of experts missed badly on an important prediction.

That group predicted that Premier Chou En-lai was almost certain to be succeeded by Acting Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-ping. The successor, however, was Hua Kuo-feng, whose commitment to recent foreign policy is reportedly less than Mr. Teng's.

Mr. Brown argues in his article that foreign policy issues are a major factor in internal Chinese politics. He also suggests that Mr. Teng's recent fall from power may be tied in part to his efforts to seek Western technology, including military technology.

Delegates at Habitat Walk Out on Israeli

VANCOUVER, British Columbia, June 3 (AP)—Several Arab, African and Communist delegations walked out of the United Nations Habitat conference today when the Israeli representative rose to address a session.

Prince Majid ibn Abdel Aziz of Saudi Arabia said the walkout occurred because "the presence of Israel is illegal and against the previous resolutions of the Security Council."

Karl Schmeichen, head of the East German delegation, said his group and other delegations from East European countries walked out to protest against Israeli policies toward Arab nations. "It is impossible to talk about human settlements and at the same time occupy foreign territory," Mr. Schmeichen said.

The exact number of countries joining the walkout was not known, but it appeared that about a dozen were involved.

Ford Plans to Join Parley In Puerto Rico June 27-28

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3 — President Ford announced officially today that he would join in an economic meeting with the leaders of six other major industrialized nations this month, "to chart a course that will keep the recovery moving forward at a healthy, sustained pace."

Mr. Ford, reading a statement in the White House briefing room, said the meeting would be held in Puerto Rico on June 27 and 28.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon briefing reporters after the President's statement, denied in response to repeated questions that the calling of the meeting or its timing had been motivated by partisan political considerations.

But both officials indicated that the United States would have no specific policy goals in Puerto Rico and Mr. Simon warned that there should be no expectation that "important announcements will come out that will instantly solve problems."

Canadians Are Invited

The new economic meeting will continue discussions held in November at the Chateau de Rambouillet in France among the leaders of the United States, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan and Britain. Canada, which was excluded from the Rambouillet meeting at the insistence of France, will participate in the Puerto Rico parley at the invitation of the United States, the host.

Unlike the meeting in France, which was called at the urging of France and attended with some reluctance by the United States, this meeting—already dubbed "Rambouillet II" by some—was initiated by Washington, according to White House officials.

The officials said that President Ford brought up the matter with President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France during the latter's visit to this country last month. The French President then sought and obtained the concurrence of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany, the officials added.

At last November's meeting, the major issue was concern among the other industrial powers that the United States would not expand its economic recovery rapidly enough to insure the recovery of their own economies. A secondary issue was a dispute between the United States and France over floating vs. fixed exchange rates.

The monetary question was resolved in principle at the conference and the unexpectedly rapid recovery of the United States economy has made that issue moot. Mr. Ford and his advisers conceded today that there were no really pressing issues to be taken up in Puerto Rico.

The President said that at Rambouillet the leaders had agreed to extensive cooperation to sustain a worldwide economic recovery and added, "This has meant less inflation and more jobs for millions upon millions of people."

When asked how the relatively amorphous agreements reached at Rambouillet had produced so many jobs, Secretary Simon replied that the conference had helped create "a tone of confidence that elected officials are doing the job."

Trips abroad and meetings with foreign leaders have traditionally enhanced the domestic political position of American Presidents. That this meeting was scheduled before the Republican National Convention, where Mr. Ford faces a serious challenge from Ronald Reagan, was regarded by some as an indication that it was motivated, in part at least, by political considerations. The convention opens Aug. 16.

Other Election Tests

Chancellor Schmidt, Prime Minister Takeo Miki of Japan and possibly Prime Minister James Callaghan of Britain will also face stiff political tests in the relatively near future.

But Mr. Kissinger said that politics were not involved in calling the meeting, asserting, "We do not believe the cohesion of the industrialized democracies is a partisan issue."

Issues to be discussed in Puerto Rico, in addition to ways to sustain the world recovery without reigniting inflation, include financial, monetary and trade policies, the President said.

British Lend Magna Carta to Ex-Colony

By RICHARD L. MADDEN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—The British lost their American colonies nearly 200 years ago, but a Parliamentry delegation did not seem to mind today as it presented the oldest of the four remaining original copies of Magna Carta to the American people as a Bicentennial loan.

At a ceremony in the Rotunda of the Capitol, Lord Elwyn-Jones, Britain's Lord Chancellor and leader of the delegation, thanked the United States senators and representatives, wearing their usual business suits, for letting him appear in wig and a robe. He drew laughter and applause when he said:

"Peoples not failiar with our ways have thought it a trifle paradoxical for the British to be joining in the celebration of the Bicentenary of what was, after all, the loss of the American colonies. They overlook our traditions of compromise. We in fact now regard the events of two centuries ago as a victory for the English-speaking world."

The 761-year-old document—the charter of personal and political liberty extracted by rebellious barons from King John at Runnymede June 15, 1215—will remain on display in the Rotunda for a year. However, a gold facsimile of Magna Carta and its massive gold and silver presentation case, a gift from Britain, will remain as a permanent fixture in the Capitol.

In accepting the document, the Speaker of the House, Carl Albert, Democrat of Oklahoma, said that the occasion was "the most significant part of our Bicentennial celebration, because it means that our Capitol will house, out of the generosity of the British Parliament, the most important single political document in the lone history of the English-speaking nations."

Lord Elwyn-Jones told the senators and representatives crowded into the Rotunda that Magna carta, the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States had mingled to form a common heritage and tradition.

"Your recovery from the tribulations of recent years has especially impressed us," he said. "Both at home and aboard, you have been beset by circumstances and adversities which appeared to shatter your confidence and to threaten the principles on which depends the smooth running of a great democracy—circumstances which might have broken a less resilient people.

"But now, it is evident to all your friends that your strength is untouched and your resolution firm. Above all, your Constitution has proved its soundness and its vitality."

The ceremony followed by 10 days a visit by an American Congressional delegation to Westminster Hall in London to receive the gold copy of Magna Carta. The Royal Air Force brought the document itself to Washington.

The speeches, and even the document's presentation case, designed by Louis Osman, a British goldsmith, stressed the common ties of the two countries. The pedestal is made of pegmatite, the rock that once linked the European and North American Continents, and of British sandstone, which is similar to the Virginia sandstone used in the walls of the Rotunda.

Although the original document has disappeared, four official copies, signed by King John, were made for distribution throughout Britain. It was the oldest of these copies that Lord Elwyn-Jones presented today.

The document is in a sealed capsule inside the display case.

"Its sealed in the same air it has been breathing for centuries in the British Museum, so it will be comfortable and won't suffer cultural shock," a British Embassy official said.

ENERGY CUTBACK ORDERED BY BEAME

City Agencies Told to Reduce Fuel Use by 25 Percent

By MARY BREASTED

Mayor Beame yesterday ordered city agencies that he controls to devise plans for cutting their fuel consumption by 25 percent in the next fiscal year. The move will mean reducing thermostats in the affected buildings from 70 degrees to 68 degrees during the winter.

The Mayor also ordered the agencies to reduce their consumption of electricity by 5 percent in the fiscal year that begins July 1.

A spokesman for John T. Carroll, the Municipal Service Administrator, said that if the Mayor's executive order was successfully implemented, the city would save at least $2.6 million in fuel costs and about $3.3 million in electric bills.

The heat and power costs of the mayoral agencies in the current fiscal year will total about $95 million, the spokesman said. The Mayor's office estimated in the 1975-76 budget that the costs would be about $69 million.

Under the Mayor's order yesterday, air-conditioners will be set to higher thermostat temperatures during the summer, and other measures will be taken to reduce lighting costs.

The Municipal Service Administration will be responsible for monitoring the new energy-saving measures.

A spokesman for the Mayor's office said that an incentive for reducing energy costs had been structured into the city budget for fiscal 1977.

In that budget, for the first time, energy costs have been included in each agency's individual budget. In the past, those costs were budgeted to the Municipal Service Administration, but City Hall felt that the system discouraged accountability for energy costs.

The Mayor's office hopes that under the tight budget procedures the city has instituted as a result of the fiscal crisis, which force agencies to keep within specific spending levels each quarter, they will keep a close watch on their energy consumption.

Mr. Carroll's spokesman said that the Mayor would hold a cabinet meeting next week to give all agency heads a list of suggested techniques for keeping down energy consumption. The meeting has not yet been scheduled.

Torres, Ex-President of Bolivia, Found Murdered in Argentina

BUENOS AIRES, June 3 (AP)—The body of former President Juan José Torres of Bolivia has been found on a rural roadside, the authorities said today.

They said that 55-year-old General Torres was blindfolded and had been shot twice in the neck and once behind the ear.

In an official statement, the Interior Ministry repudiated a wave of violence it said had smeared the country's image.

The left-wing Bolivian general, who had been living in exile in Argentina, disappeared early Tuesday. According to the authorities he was missing without trace until late yesterday when a ranch hand 65 miles from Buenos Aires heard shots and saw four men in a car speeding off, leaving a body behind.

The police lates identified the man as General Torres.

Two weeks ago the bullet-riddled bodies of two self-exiled Uruguayan politicians were discovered after armed men dragged them from their homes.

More than 320 people have been killed in all forms of political violence since March 24 when the armed forces overthrew President Isabel Martínes de Perón, with a promise to restore order and protect human rights.

General Torres leaves his wife, Emma Obleas de Torres.

'Man of the People'

General Torres was an enigmatic personality. Proud of his Indian blood, he called himself a poor "man of the people," but for most of his life, as a military officer, he was a member of Bolivia's middle-class elite.

The short, stocky professional soldier, who usually frowned on extremists of the right and the left, was suddenly thrust to the height of power on Oct. 6, 1970.

He proclaimed himself leader of a "revolution of the people" after capturing control of a loose alliance of left-wing civilians and officers that had wrested power from rightists who only a few days previously had taken over in a coup.

In 1967, as Chief of Staff of the armed forces, General Torres helped plan the operation that resulted in the death of Ernesto Che Guevara, the Argentine-born Cuban revolutionary who sought to organize a peasants' revolt in Bolivia.

Yet by August 1971, General Torres had himself swung so far left that conservative Bolivian leaders, fearing he was turning the country toward the Soviet sphere and into Cuban-style socialism, overthrew his Government. He was forced to flee into exile in Peru.

A Rapid Ascent

Born on March 5, 1921, into a poor family in the town of Cochabamba, General Torres was a graduate of the Bolivian military academy, at which he later taught. He rose most rapidly in rank during the 12 year presidency of Victor Paz Estenssoro, who had seized power in a revolt by young officers including Juan José Torres.

But in 1964, General Torres, then a colonel, supported the military coup that overthrew the leftist and democratic Paz regime. Under the late President René Barrientos Ortuño, he served as Ambassador to Uruguay and, briefly, as Minister of Labor and Social Security.

In September 1969, General Torres joined a coup led by Gen. Alfredo Ovando Candia that overthrew the civilian regime of Louis Adolfo Siles. The new Ovando Government made him chief of the armed forces, but in July 1970, under pressure to crack down on leftists, General Ovando discharged General Torres and retired him from the army.

It was at that point that General Torres presumably started plotting revolution and his own assumption of presidential power.

Although interested in the law in his earlier years, he explains that he was always what he called a "normal inclination" to become associated with the union movement. He is particularly proud of what he has been able to accomplish through the union over the years in helping people—the establishment of an education fund to assist sons and daughters of members, centers for retired members, day care centers, housing projects—as well as improvements in wages and working conditions.

"The union is almost my whole life," he said the other day. "I find it difficult in terms of the things that I consider important. I believe in building a better world—not just a better house or more material things for myself—but to better people's lives. And I believe trade unions are necessary to preserve the American way of life. I don't think we can have a free democratic society without a free democratic labor movement."

NEW UNION AIMS AT J. P. STEVENS CO.

Plan to Boycott Concern Is Backed by Meany

By DAMON STETSON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—The newly constituted Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union set as its first major goal today the organization of 44,000 employees of J. P. Stevens & Company, the giant Southern textile chain.

As an initial step in the drive, the 4,000 delegates at the merger convention of the clothing and textile unions approved a "massive national consumer boycott" of Stevens products, such as sheets, towels, tablecloths, blankets and carpets that are produced under various brand names. The company also sells many of its textile products to other manufacturers, which could add complications to the implementation of the proposed boycott.

George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, told delegates that the boycott and organizing drive would have the full support of the 14.2-million-member labor federation.

Mr. Meany formally installed Murray H. Finley as president of the merged union along with the other officers: Jacob Sheinkman, as secretary treasurer; Sol Stetin, who headed the textile union, as senior executive vice president and head of the textile division of the new union, and William M. DuChessi as executve vice president. Mr. Sheinkman had been general secretry-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Mr. DuChessi had held the same post in the textile union.

In an address to the convention, Mr. Meany said that the leadership of the merged, 500,000-member union would be "sorely tested" in the years ahead and that the first test would come from J. P. Sevens. He described the company as an employer "who willfully and amliciously violates the nation's labor laws." Mr. Meany added that it said "no" to human rights, "no" to the legitimate desires of its employecs, and that it was "the No. 1 labor lawbreaker in America."

"I can tell you without hesitation and without qualification," he said, "that you will have the complete, total, all-out support of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. in your boycott against this outlaw company.

"J. P. Stevens didn't just take on its employees or the textile workers or the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers when it chose its lawless path to labor relations," Mr. Meany continued. "J.P. Stevens took on the entire labor movement."

The resolution adopted unanimously by the delegates accused J. P. Stevens of open defiance of the law as well as the use of illegal tactics to crush the efforts of its employees to organize.

The Textile Workers Union of America, one of the newly merged unions, won bargaining rights for 350 workers at Steven's plant in Statesboro, Ga., in 1968, the resolution said, but the company has refused to bargain in good faith, and is closing the plant.

In Roanoke Rapids, N.C., 3,600 workers in seven plants voted 19 months ago to be represented by the textile union, the resolution said, but the company again refused to bargain in good faith or agree to even minimum conditions of a contract.

Despite being found guilty of labor law violations 15 times by the National Labor Relations Board, in cases that were upheld eight times by the United States Court of Appeals and three times by the United States Supreme Court, the resolution said, J. P. Stevens "thumbs its nose at the National Labor Relations Board and continues to violate the law as though it were a power unto itself."

Details of how the boycott will be carried out and how much money will be spent by the labor movement to implement the effort will be worked out in the next few weeks, according to Mr. Finley.

Earlier, when there was talk of a probable boycott, J. P. Stevens refused to comment, with a spokesman saying that differences between the union and Stevens were considered private matters and could be resolved only by negotiaton between the two. But Stevens's chairman, James D. Finley, speaking to securities analysts in New York recently, expressed doubt that a boycott, if invoked, would be effective because of the diversity of the company's products and the nonidentifiable nature of a large portion of its goods.

Today a spokesman for J. P. Stevens in Greenville, S. C., said the company would stand by the statement of its chairman, Mr. Finley.

RHODESIA REMARK IS DOGGING REAGAN

He's Repeatedly Being Asked to Explain His Comment on Sending Troops to Africa

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times

MONTEREY, Calif., June 3—Ronald Reagan spent much of today attempting to extricate himself from a minor furor over what he called misrepresentation of a "hypothetical" answer that as President he would, under some circumstances, send United States troops to Rhodesia.

At the same time, he said he did see some circumstances where sending soldiers to Rhodesia would be conceivable, but added, "I don't think it would be needed at all."

Six days before the important California primary, where Mr. Reagan, former Governor of the state, is considered the Republican front-runner over President Ford, several newspapers and television stations gave prominent display to Mr. Reagan's remarks about Rhodesia, the African nation where the white-minority Government is under increasing pressure from the majority black independence movement.

"I made the mistake of trying to answer a hypothetical question with a hypothetical answer," Mr. Reagan told a group of supporters at a breakfast in San Francisco this morning, and then he attacked "headline hunters" in the press for overstating his hypothetical point of view.

"I'm not going to start a war in Rhodesia," he said in one of many times he was asked to defend his remarks made yesterday in a speech in Sacramento.

In the exchange in Sacramento, Mr. Reagan suggested that United States troops might be needed, and possibly British soldiers, to guarantee a transition in Rhodesia between a minority-white to a black-majority government. He said:

"Whether it will be enough to have simply a show of strength, a promise that we would [supply] troops, or whether you'd have to go in with occupation forces or not, I don't know. But I believe in the interests of peace and avoiding bloodshed, and to achieve a democratic majority rule which we all, I think, subscribe to, I think would be worth this, for us to do it."

Prominence to Remarks

Most members of the national press corps who have been traveling with Mr. Reagan did give prominence to the comments in their reports, but noted that the exchange was on a hypothetical basis. But the emphasis on the remarks made by some of the California press has made it an issue, at least to the degree that it has kept Mr. Reagan from commenting on other issues that he would rather discuss.

During appearances in San Francisco and later in Monterey, Mr. Reagan repeatedly attacked "irresponsible" reporting, and sought to play down the appearance that his remarks were warlike.

"The only disagreement between the Rhodesian Government and the majority is one of how much time it should take to change to a majority rule in Rhodesia," he asserted. "That's the only issue between them."

"I have suggested that the United States, and possibly Great Britain, should offer our services to mediate, and hopefully we could get both sides together as we've done so often in the Middle East."

Mr. Reagan said there had been "many instances" where the United States had sent a "token military force, such as to Lebanon during the Eisenhower Administration, and suggested that it would not be inappropriate for the United States to do so if it could help achieve a transition in Rhodesia. He suggested that the United States should have done this during the recent Cyprus crisis that also involved Turkey and Greece, and during the current Lebanese civil war, and said that he would favor such troop actions as President.

After a luncheon speech here, Mr. Reagan flew to Santa Barbara. Speaking to a mostly friendly crowd at the airport, Mr. Reagan said his position on Rhodesia "in no way envisions us going to war, but it does envision us doing something that I think is our Christian duty, as the leaders of the free world." His remarks drew loud applause, although one group of college students held up a sign saying: "Majority Rule—Not Troops."

Response by Ford

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP)—President Ford said today that he did not believe it would be necessary to send United States troops to southern Africa because peace in the region could be achieved through diplomacy and negotiation.

Mr. Ford made his remarks in response to a question about the statement on Rhodesia made by Mr. Reagan, who said he might consider sending a token force of troops to white-ruled Rhodesia if that Government asked for help to keep peace and avoid bloodshed.

"Any indication that a President might send American troops to southern Africa, I think is irresponsible," Mr. Ford said.

Poll Finds Public Is Hazy on Candidates

By The Associated Press

Ronald Reagan has made a strong impression during this campaign year with his advocacy of higher military spending and a overhaul of the welfare system, according to an Associated Press poll.

Mr. Reagan's stands provide the two clearest links between a candidate and an issue in the otherwise blurred picture of Presidential contenders and positions that Americans now see after four months of intensive primary campaigning, the poll found.

In the poll, designed to determine Americans' views on the issues, the only other clear link of a candidate and an issue came from supporters of Representative Morris K. Udall, with their understanding of his views and their concern about pollution, civil rights and the solving of energy problems.

The survey, conducted for The Associated Press by the Roper Organization of New York between May 8 and May 15, was based on face-to-face interviews with 2,001 men and women over 18 years old across the country. It found that an average of more than half of the potential voters did not know where their favorite candidate stood on five major issues.

Government Spending

Other major findings of the poll were the following:

¶Economic issues head the list of Americans, concerns during this election year, with 59 percent of those questioned naming inflation or unemployment, or holding down government spending, as their main worry.

¶Crime was the second biggest concern for Americans. Lawlessness in general, drug abuse and criminal acts by public officials were all in the top five issues.

¶About 57 percent of all Americans are choosing a candidate to support for his personal qualities, not for his stands on the issues. More than 58 percent of Jimmy Carter's supporters, for example, said personal factors were the basis for their decision, compared with only 20 percent who cited issues.

In addition to more than half of the people not knowing where the candidates stood, many erred in naming where their favorite candidate stood on five major issues. Carter backers were the most likely to name the wrong stand for their contender, missing four out of five issues picked to differentiate among the candidates.

During the second week in May when the poll was conducted, Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California and Senator Frank Church of Idaho scored their initial primary victories. Because the national perceptions of Mr. Brown and Mr. Church had not then taken shape, the poll did not test their supporters' perceptions.

By the date of the interviewing, Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama had stopped campaigning and was running fourth in delegates. Thus, his supporters' perceptions also were not tested.

Mr. Reagan's supporters stand out in the poll above those of other candidates for their precision in discerning his stands on military spending and welfare.

By a 65-to-9 margin, his backers correctly linked him with pushing for more money for national defense. But even then 26 percent of his supporters could not say where he stood.

Mr. Reagan's supporters are the main reservoir of concern about United States-Soviet relations and military spending found by the poll. About 22 percent of his backers named these two issues as the most important ones, close to double the figure for any other candidate.

Brown Remains Noncommittal On Bid to Limit Nuclear Plants

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND
Special to The New York Times

LONG BEACH, Calif., June 3—Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., resuming his home-state campaigning for the Democratic Presidental nomination, carefully straddled today what is probably the touchiest political issue of the moment in California.

The issue is Proposition 15, an initiative measure (a measure that provides for direct citizen legislation) that would permit future nuclear power plant operations in the state only under stringent conditions.

The proposition will be voted on in Tuesday's primary election. And as opponents and proponents have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in their battle for support, Governor Brown had been asked repeatedly in recent weeks where he stood on the measure.

Signs 3 Bills

He has regularly declined to answer, saying that he was waiting for the State Legislature to act on three bills that would provide nuclear safeguards under somewhat less stringent terms than Proposition 15. The bills were passed early this week and the Governor signed them today.

Since many Brown backers were line up on either side of the struggle over the proposition, and his own father, former Gov. Edmund G. Brown Sr., was a co-chairman of the group opposing the measure, the issue had become politically embarrassing to the governor's candidacy.

Today, he said that the three bills, which he signed at a motel news conference here, "represent the most stringent controls of nuclear-reactor development of any state in the country."

The legislation provides for delays in new plant construction until problems in fuel processing and in disposal of radioactive waste have been resolved nationally and until a study has been made of the feasibility of putting plants underground.

"They go a long way toward meeting the concerns that people have," Mr. Brown said.

However, he would not say whether the stricter measures that would be imposed by Proposition 15 were needed.

Maintaining that he had listened carefully to the arguments of both sides, he said there was so much contrary evidence that he thought every voter should make up his own mind on the proposition.

"It now becomes the prerogative of the people to make their own judgment," he said. "It depends on what kind of future you want and what kind of risks you wish to bear. I will maintain a position of neutrality."

Leaves It to Voters

Pressed as to how he would vote personally on the measure, he repeated: "I think that's a judgment people are not often given an opportunity to make. I think they ought to make it. I am not going to weight the scales."

The proposition, which was drafted and is being promoted by environmental and other citizens' groups, says there shall be no further nuclear power construction in California unless the following occur:

¶The Federal Price-Anderson Act's $560 million limit on nuclear accident indemnity is amended within a year of the proposition's passage, or is legally waived by license applicants.

¶The State Legislature is convinced within five years that the effectiveness of nuclear plant safety systems has been demonstrated "by comprehensive testing" and that radioactive wastes can be disposed of safely.

The measure also says that if these conditions are not met, nuclear power will be phased out in California.

After signing the bills, Governor Brown resumed his campaigning at a luncheon here and appearances in San Diego.

Brown Brings Spirituality to Politica

By KENNETH A. BRIGGS

In a recent campaign speech at a Roman Catholic college, Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California remarked in a droll manner that the White House could use "a little Jesuit logic."

Mr. Brown, a Presidential contender and former Jesuit seminarian, clearly envisioned himself imparting that quality to the Oval Office. He remains proud of his Jesuit background and mentions it often in conversation.

He also brings up quotations from the Bible, thoughts from Buddhist sages and the concepts of such people as Mahatma Gandhi, a Hindu.

According to friends and associates, these broad interests flow naturally from a man who is deeply concerned for religion, self-discipline and moral truth. To those who have known him over a long period of time, any profile of Mr. Brown is essentially a profile of a spiritual seeker. "Theology," he was once quoted as saying, "is greater than politics."

Brown's Approach

Significantly, in an election year already alerted to the role of religion in politics by the posture of former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia as an evangelical Southern Baptist, Mr. Brown has emerged with his own distinct approach to spirituality.

Both Mr. Carter and Mr. Brown are worried about what they see as the nation's collapsing moral standards. Each is devout and not hesitant to speak about religious matters. Each man also practices considerable self-restraint.

But there are differences between the two men as well. For example, Mr. Carter is the product of Southern fundamentalism and relates to a Protestant belief that salvation is largely a personal matter with God through Jesus Christ. While not rejecting that view, Mr. Brown expresses the more traditional Catholic conviction that salvation is primarily a function of the whole community's relation to God and to each other.

Brown's Approach

That explains to some degree Mr. Brown's penchant for translating basic theological concepts into social and political ideas. There is little suggestion in Catholic thought that a conflict exists between the natural and the supernatural worlds. Mr. Brown, schooled in Thomas Aquinas, was taught that God's natural laws ought to be practiced in society.

Thus, his favorite campaign theme, calling for lower expectations and limited goals, is regarded by Mr. Brown as "very religious" because it reaffirms mankind's finite place in the divine order. Another name for it is the doctrine of original sin, usually interpreted as a warning against excessive pride.

Mr. Brown's message repeatedly stresses the need for "a new spirit" that would correct what he considers false use of human nature.

"Religion in the world as I understand it involves the relation of God and man," Mr. Brown said the other day in an interview. "A lot of conventional thinking appears to say that everything is secular. That's never an interpretation that most humans in history have held and not one that most Americans hold today."

"There are limitations, but human pride sometimes blinds us to them," he continued with his typical intense gaze. "We must become more humble, more aware of the dependence among man, nature and God."

Mr. Brown's tendency to speak of the "oneness" of all creation and the related quality of all experiences partly reflect his acquaintance with the practices of Zen Buddhism. He has studied books by esteemed Zen teachers, he occasionally visits the Zen center in San Francisco and has spent weekends on meditation retreats.

He emphasizes that Zen is "not incompatible with Catholicism" and that Buddhism has "given me another insight into Catholic tradition." His favorite motto, "age quod agis," translated from the Latin into "Do whatever you are doing," is taken from the Jesuits, but he says it could just as easily from the Zen.

Admires Mystics

Both religious systems also contributed to his organic view of the world whereby all parts are equally important. "Whether you are a Governor or chopping wood or tending the fire, any role is equal to any other role," he said.

The 38-year-old Governor has often been called a mystic, a term he describes as an admirable state of mind but dismisses as "presumptuous" when used to describe him. He is also frequently referred to as an ascetic, a label that refers to his relatively Spartan way of life.

He does, in fact, admire mystics such as Thomas Merton and Teilard de Chardin and strives to live a simple existence. Some associates attribute both traits to inborn character rather than to the result of religious training.

"The Spartan living certainly predated seminary days with the Jesuits," says the Rev. Leo Rock, who taught Mr. Brown 10th-grade Latin at St. Ignatius High School. "It was very characteristic of him then. He was very indifferent to things like dress."

Father Rock, now the master of novitiates at the seminary Mr. Brown attended from 1956 to 1960, adds that rigorous asceticism has never been typical of Jesuits and that the inflexible schedule Mr. Brown had to follow has since been considerably relaxed.

Mr. Brown's proclivity for self-discipline also seemed to have been present from an early age.

"He was quiet and exceptionally self-composed," recalled the Rev. James Healy, who was master of novices at the time. "I remember him coming to see me in his early days, planting himself solidly on his two feet and saying just what was on his mind. He never wasted my time."

Mr. Brown's decision to leave the seminary did not mean that he had abandoned the Catholic faith. It has continued to be a vital if evolving factor in his life.

The traits most often associated with Mr. Brown's Jesuit character are self-assurance and independence. Since their founding in the 16th century to combat the effects of the Protestant Reformation, Jesuits have developed an image as Catholicism's elite corps, the palace guard of the faith, adroit intellectually and proud in performance of their duties.

There appear to be several strands of religious thought in Mr. Brown's Catholic consciousness. He combines a traditional respect for morals and authority with a post-Vatican Council strain of independent thinking. He is not as regular at mass attendance as he once was, but associates say that that should not be construed as rejection of the church.

It is more in line with the pattern found among large numbers of Catholics who are more distant from the institution but still committed to the basic theology of the church.

"Like many intelligent modern Catholics, he lives at the margins of Church institutions," says the Rev. Edward J. Cripps, a writer for America, the Jesuit magazine. "But most still tend to make decisions on the basis of their Catholic tradition and still feel their Catholicism is very real."

A similar description of this emerging Catholic style in America has been given by the Rev. Andre

Stassen Enters the Race For G.O.P. Nomination

PHILADELPHIA, June 3 (AP) — Harold Stassen, a four-time loser in the contest for the Republican Presidential nomination, announced today he would try again this year.

"My reason is that the policies and programs in which I believe, and which I am confident will lift America, with solutions for our most serious problems at the opening of our third century, are different from those which have been presented by any of the other candidates of either party," he said.

Mr. Stassen, 69 years old, was Governor of Minnesota from 1939 to 1943. He has not won an elective office since then. He ran for mayor of Philadelphia once and lost.

Mr. Stassen served as a special assistant on disarmament to President Eisenhower in the late 1950's.

Ocean County Group Asks Ban on Shore A-Plants

TOMS RIVER, June 3 (UPI)—The Ocean County Freeholders have passed a controversial resolution calling for a ban on construction of nuclear power plants along the shore.

The resolution cleared yesterday after a vote on the measure had been postponed twice in the last month.

Robert Gasser, who drafted the resolution, said a nuclear ban had the support of freeholders in Atlantic and Cape May counties.

However, the Jersey Central Power and Light Company immediately issued a statement opposing the ban and saying that a new nuclear plant was needed in the Ocean County area.

Jersey Central, which operates the state's only nuclear generating plant at Oyster Creek, plans to build a second plant at Forked River.

The New York Times/Gary Settle

at a shopping center in Parma, Ohio, Jimmy Carter had his nose tweaked Frisky, 6½ months old. The Ohio primary will be held next Tuesday.

CARTER CAUTIONS PARTY ON PROMISES

of the forthcoming platform he feared, Mr. Carter mentioned "the promise of instant answers to all the financial needs of urban areas" and of state governments. He also mentioned what he called "an instant approach to national health insurance" and "instant federalization of welfare."

This was in line with his previous suggestions that a program of national health insurance should be phased into effect over a period of years, and that state governments should continue to bear a part of the cost of welfare programs, although cities should be relieved of their welfare burden.

Mr. Carter did not make clear whether he would use his now massive bloc of votes to initiate a floor fight at the convention if the platform contained elements repugnant to him. If, on the other hand, the platform committee writes a document tailored to his wishes, more liberal Democrats would have to muster a vote of 25 percent of the committee to take a minority report to the floor.

"From a political point of view, the worst thing Carter could do is to touch the platform at all," said one of his supporters. "There seems to be little possibility of a floor fight on either credentials or rules, and the anti-Carter people would probably love to cut him up in a fight over the platform."

Mr. Carter said, coining a word, that the party should "prioritize" its platform. It should "establish the cost, feasibility and time frame" of promised programs, he added.

"If you look down the list of things the mayors of American cities want and put them in toto in the platform, there is no way to finance them," he said.

Mr. Carter was endorsed at the news conference by a former Ohio Governor, John J. Gilligan, who is secretary of the drafting subcommittee of the Platform Committee.

Mr. Gilligan said he "totally" agreed with Mr. Carter's remarks about the platform.

As he campaigned in northern Ohio today, with stops at crowded shopping centers in Cuyahoga Falls, Akron and Canton, Mr. Carter reiterated to audiences his appeal for restraint in the party platform, saying he wanted the Democrats to be a "responsible" party.

There seemed to be, in general, a more conservative tone in his speeches than has been evident in recent weeks. He told one crowd in Cuyahoga Falls that, while he wanted to see the party platform be "a vision" of the future, "I don't want to mislead anyone by saying things that can't actually be accomplished." This, he said, "is almost the same thing as lying to the people."

Udall Disappointed

CLEVELAND, June 3 (UPI)—Representative Morris K. Udall said today that he was "disappointed" that Mr. Gilligan endorsed Mr. Carter for President.

"I regret it," the Arizonan said of the endorsement. "The things John Gilligan stood for are much closer to what I am talking about than what Jimmy Carter is talking about."

...Senator Tunney supported health insurance, too," Mr. Greer declares in his Papa Walton voice in one of the spots. "Then one day he changed his mind, said we can't afford health insurance. That's not true. We can't afford Senator Tunney."

In fact, the Senator insists, he has continued to support the concept of a national health insurance program, although he has withdrawn his support from the Kennedy-Corman bill, which he once co-sponsored, on the ground that it would now be so costly that it does not stand a practical chance of enactment.

Unfairness Charged

The accusation that he is overly friendly to the Pentagon and to the oil companies is based on his support for the B-1 bomber and the deregulation of natural-gas prices. The Tunney side says this unfairly overlooks his sponsorship of legislation to break up the oil companies.

Mr. Tunney has not been conspicuously successful so far in turning debate on military spending to his advantage by charging that the country's defenses would be "dismantled" and that 2.5 million people would be thrown out of work if the Pentagon's budget were slashed to $55 billion as Mr. Hayden proposes in an 85-page program he published earlier this year.

Instead, the Tunney side has gone on the offensive with a series of television commercials that accuse Mr. Hayden of waging an irresponsible "smear" campaign.

"Richard Nixon launched his career in California with the same ruthless disregard for the truth," the actor Gregory Peck declares in one of the Tunney sports. "Don't let it happen again."

It may seem paradoxical that Mr. Hayden, who says he is running as part of an effort to build a "lasting citizens movement," is depending so heavily now on a gaudy television campaign with show-business surrogates. In California, where the electorate generally resists organizing of any kind, it might also seem inevitable.

In fact, the Hayden television onslaught might not have been possible had the Supreme Court not removed the restriction on the amount of money a candidate can spend in his own behalf.

As of May 24, the Hayden campaign had outspent Mr. Tunney by a narrow margin, and $331,000—41 percent of its total spending—had come in the form of loans from the candidate and his wife, the actress Jane Fonda.

Both sides say the election could turn on last-minute developments in particular the impressions left by a televised debate the candidates are to have Saturday evening.

More 'Smears' Expected

The Hayden forces have been freely predicting a "smear" campaign by Senator Tunney that might use radical passages in Mr. Hayden's speeches and writings from around the time of the Chicago Seven conspiracy trial.

In the Republican primary two of the three leading candidates made their national reputations in the period when Mr. Hayden was making his as an activist.

One candidate is S. I. Hayakawa, the former president of San Francisco State University, who faced down campus protesters at the height of the antiwar movement. The other is Robert H. Finch, who was Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare in the first Nixon Administration and later was a White House counselor.

The third leading candidate in a large field is Representative Alphonzo Bell, a multimillionaire and former oilman who has risen rapidly in the polls, apparently as a result of a heavy push on television that has used up, so far, $681,000 of the candidate's own funds.

This evening's Field Poll shows Dr. Hayakawa ahead with 32 percent of the Republican vote, followed by Mr. Finch at 24 percent and Mr. Ball at 22. Mr. Finch had slipped since the last Field Poll, while his two opponents were registering strong advances.

2 Politically Opposite Jersey Towns Share Apathy Over Primary

Hasbrouck Hts. Fights Dump

By MAURICE CARROLL
Special to The New York Times

HASBROUCK HEIGHTS, N. J.—Not since a hometown boy. Arthur Godfrey, buzzed the Teterboro Airport control tower in his private plane. Not since the funeral of mobster Willie Moretti drew hordes to Corpus Christi Church. Not since the borough outmaneuvered the State Highway Department.

Maybe not since George Washington's bedraggled army was chased by the British along old Polifly Road.

Not in memory has Hasbrouck Heights been in such public ferment over political matters.

Gerald Ford? Ronald Reagan? The, uh, Democrats (they are a small band in Hasbrouck Heights)?

"It's strange," said Edward A. Borghi, elbows on the counter behind which he collects the borough taxes. "I've been in political campaigns all my life and I'm not hearing a thing. Not a single, solitary thing."

But just mention the "resource recovery facility" that is planned down the hill.

Turmoil, Garbage, Backlash

"I've only been in town 20 years," said Burney Czarnecki as he poured coffee for a patron in Fisher's on the Boulevard. "But I can't recall anything like it. The place is in turmoil."

"In Heights Future . . . Sweet Smell of Garbage" was the main headline in The Observer a couple of Thursdays ago, and Rose Heck, the editor, paced through her office behind Plato's Beauty Salon the other day and said, "We're a staunch Republican town in a Democratic state. Maybe this was a little backlash." She laughed briefly. "A little present."

For when New Jersey holds its primary June 8, what Mrs. Heck assesses as "the old faithful" Hasbrouck Heights Republicans will turn out to choose among delegates pledged to President Ford and the unauthorized team ambiguously pledged to a "former California governor." Democrats, with a livelier Presidential contest, might be tempted out in heavier-than-normal local numbers.

But no one here, at least according to what they are saying, is really much interested.

Dump Talk

The political topic is the plan by the Hackensack Meadowlands Development Commmission to put a vast mechanized garbage dump on a 20-by-30-acre site next to Route 17. That overcrowded road carries the rest of the world around (and) momentarily through one corner of this friendly community astride the Bergen County ridge that runs south from Hackensack between the Passaic and Hackensack River valleys.

Hasbrouck Heights, according to a white wooden signpost pointing toward the Municipal Building on Hamilton Avenue, was settled in 1728. The painted seal behind Borough Clerk Robert I. Rafford's desk notes that it was incorporated Aug. 2, 1894. "That's the wrong date," Mr. Rafford says. "It was Aug. 12." But he keeps the seal because he likes the painting.

In the memory of mankind, the place has been Republican.

"We just take it for granted," explained Alberta C. Ruckert, who has been reporting on community affairs for decades, first for The Bergen Evening Record, now as associate editor of The Observer, a weekly.

"We had two Democrats on the Council once," she said. "But they don't last here. They get too wise."

The current Democratic Councilman, George Jackson, is running as an independent. The Republicans have two male candidates, the Democrats two female, and this should make for a fairly lively election in November.

But as Mrs. Heck put it, "In Hasbrouck Heights, we're basically interested in Hasbrouck Heights. In campaign literature, it's fine to start at the top of the ballot. Here we start at the bottom."

So visitors do not hear much about the New Jersey primary. They will have pointed out to them the red brick building at the Boulevard and Franklin Avenue that was the Strand Theater when Arthur Godfrey's mother played the piano there. Harlan Allen, the real estate man, says she taught her son everything he used later as a radio-television entertainer.

Or visitors will be shown the comfortable house on Lawrence Avenue with the porch over the garage where Frank Sinatra used to live. His secretary has written Bicentennial planners that he will be unable to return for the ball Nov. 20 in the new Sheraton Heights Hotel.

Edward A. Borghi
"I'm not hearing a thing"

Burney Czarnecki
"The place is in turmoil"

The New York Times/William E. Sauro
Rose Heck
"Maybe this was a little backlash."

Fred Reininger, who runs the Terrace Tavern, was cleaning out his attic the other day and found an old Life magazine with a picture of traffic jammed all about Corpus Christi Church—"It was like Times Square."

It was, he remembered, the funeral of Willie Moretti. In the 1950's, when there was a spate of public interest in the fact that some racketeers made their homes in Bergen County, the talkative Mr. Moretti talked too much to investigators and, one day, was shot to death.

Borough Clerk Rafford recalled the victory over the Highway Department. About 25 years ago, the contractor who was widening Route 17 closed the highway to traffic, sending streams of wandering vehicles through Hasbrouck Heights.

So the mayor ordered the police to put barricades at the two main streets—Terrace Avenue, which was Polifly Road when Washington's army retreated across New Jersey in 1776, and the Boulevard, which is home to the borough's small stretch of stores. This forced the traffic to meander west to Lodi in search of a through route.

"That highway closing lasted about four hours," Mr. Rafford recalled with a satisfied laugh.

That is how it is here. "So long as people don't step on our toes, we don't bother them," Mrs. Ruckert said. Which is one reason why the garbage dump they read about in The Observer preoccupies the 13,650 residents far more than New Jersey's turn in the series of primary elections they see reported on the 6 o'clock news from the New York television stations 10 miles to the east.

No Commotion

Still, says Mr. Borghi, who has to run for his job as tax collector and who has been involved in Republican politics since he came here many years ago from Hudson County, the Republican vote might split fairly evenly. In the 1972 November election, the Heights gave Richard M. Nixon 5,200 votes, Senator George McGovern 1,800.

Younger Republicans might go for a new face like Mr. Reagan's, he says.

On the other hand, "the people I talk to here don't like much commotion. Down deep, they're not looking for Reagan because he's stirring things up. They think Republicans have had enough stirring up these last few years. Maybe this Panama Canal thing is stirring up the average guy, but here, I don't think so."

As a man who has held his job through practical contemplation of such things, Mr. Borghi is prepared to concede the possibility of undetected undercurrents.

"The Democrats are having some action, and they're getting all the play in New Jersey," he says. "But our side hasn't had a thing going on. When Nixon ran, we had offers from the county for literature, all kinds of giveaways. This year, we haven't heard a thing.

"I can't figure it out. Perhaps people are just saying to themselves that they'll make up their own minds."

> In 1972, Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., went 3 to 1 for Richard M. Nixon for President. In the same year, Senator George McGovern won an 1,800-vote plurality in Teaneck, N. J. Four years later, potential voters in these two politically different communities are talking about new concerns and have new preceptions. These two articles portray some of their 1976 concerns.

Cynicism Makes Inroads in Liberal Teaneck

By LUCINDA FRANKS
Special to The New York Times

TEANECK, N. J.—The cost of heating the little brick house doubled and his wages did not move. His country, and therefore he himself, he feels, was shamed in Vietnam. And somewhere along the line, he lost faith that no matter what happened, he could always support his family.

That is what has happened to Sol Parker in the last four years. And that is why, he says, he is going to vote much differently this year than he did in 1972, why he will put a lot more thought in how he casts his ballot this time.

Then, he voted for Senator George McGovern, as did most people in this prosperous polyglot suburb, the only New Jersey community to give a resounding victory to the South Dakota Democrat.

Mr. Parker's vote in 1972 was primarily an anti-Nixon vote, he says. This year, he feels, it is different. The primaries are playing a more important role in selecting the candidate and as this state's primary next Tuesday grows closer, he is looking hard at the many candidates. "We can't afford to make a mistake again," he says. "This is probably the most important Presidential election in the last hundred years."

'Half a Man'

There is just one problem. Mr. Parker thinks of himself as a simple man, a liberal Democrat with uncomplicated tastes, a wine salesman who lives modestly and frugally. But he has not seen a candidate yet who he feels can even match his abilities and those of his friends. "If we took all of them [the candidates] and put them all together," he said "maybe we could come up with a half a man."

And so the feeling goes in Teaneck. Almost everyone shares the view that the country is sorely in need of a strong leader, most agree that their vote is important in bringing this about, but both these feelings have given way to a basic cynicism about the whole process.

And normally, the residents of Teaneck do not allow apathy or negativism to settle over them. The community, made up of upper middle-class professional people who use it as a "bedroom suburb" of New York City—middle-class whites, blacks and a variety of other groups—began to integrate its schools and its neighborhoods back in the early 1960's.

44,000 Residents

To the surprise of observers, the project went off with a minimum of opposition and almost no violence. Today, Teaneck's 44,000 residents live peacefully in the midst of well-tended parks, tennis courts and shopping areas.

But even this progressive community, that did what everyone thought was impossible, has been infected by the widespread national despair of politics.

Harold Litvak, a dentist, earns more money than Sol Parker, but he feels pretty much the same. Dressed in white tennis shorts, he was batting balls at the courts in Phelps Park the other day. "The last four years," he said, "has shown us that it doesn't really matter who we vote for."

Dr. Litvak says he was part of the liberal wave of support for Mr. McGovern in 1972. "It was just like Robert Kennedy. We thought we'd gotten rid of the bosses for once," he said. "Now nobody turns us on—except maybe Jerry Brown. At least he's got some charisma."

Dr. Litvak, a tall, lean young man with curly dark hair, thinks there may never be another Kennedy or McGovern to capture the imagination of a large segment of the population. Perhaps, he feels, it is because during the last four years the nation's innocence was lost.

"It was what McGovern stood for, more than the man," he says, "and I wonder whether we will ever be able to be that idealistic again, to believe that someone can make a difference. The Ford Administration cannot really separate itself from Nixon, and there's a mistrust of Jimmy Carter. He's not saying anything. Nobody is saying anything."

Nevertheless, Mr. Litvak thinks that any Democrat who runs will get elected. "In 1972, nobody liked Nixon but everybody voted for him," he said. "Now, there's a lot of resentment against the man."

Sol Parker
". . . most important presidential election in the last hundred years."

Fred Stewart
". . . you're taxed down to the last penny."

The New York Times/Larry Morris
Rose Thompson
"I don't think any of the candidates have addressed the issues."

Sol Parker, for one, is angry that more young people in the age group of Mr. Litvak have not gone into politics.

"Where are all the kids who rioted, the radicals?" he said, holding his small grandson on his knee. "Have they become conservatives? They have to run the world now. It's theirs. But they haven't come forward. As it is we have little choice. You vote for Republicans, you get hard times. For Democrats, you get war."

Most blacks in Teaneck are Democrats, but they are also fiercely independent. Some hold views that are considered conservative. "You know, one thing the next President should do is get my people off welfare," said Fred Stewart, a chemical processor who is divorced and has two sons. "We give them too much."

'We Worked Hard'

"We all worked hard to get ourselves up here in Teaneck," he continued, locking his car before he went grocery shopping. "There were no free rides for us, and we just want to be left alone to live a normal life. You go where you can afford."

The brunt of Mr. Stewart's anger at the system is taxes. "You're taxed before you get your salary and you are taxed afterwards, taxed down to the last penny, and you're lucky if you've taken anything home."

Mr. Stewart cannot see any way out with the present array of candidates. "We haven't got anybody to put in there," he said. "We need a change, the last six years have scared everyone, but we just haven't taken it seriously."

Rehired Recently

Rose Thompson, a health administrator, was one of those laid off in the massive New York City Civil Service cuts. She was only recently rehired by the Health and Hospital Corporation.

Although she is concerned about economic issues, Mrs. Thompson voiced more of a preoccupation with this country's status as a world power. Although she is black, Mrs. Thompson is wary of the way developing African nations are approaching the United States. "We pour money into these places and they just kick our teeth," she said. "The Communist's come and take them over."

"I don't think any of the candidates have addressed the real issues," she said, "they just move and shift their platforms around. I feel confused."

Anna Jemmott, who runs a stationery store and supports three children, wants a leader "who can start the money circulating, get house-building and jobs moving again."

"We'd be better off if the politicians kept their hands out of the till," she says. It sure is a messed up world. All of a sudden, one day, the bottom fell out of the bucket. Now we've got to patch up the hole."

have the sense that he's lost a lot of his zip."

"If Carter does well Tuesday, fine, that's it," he went on. "He'll go after the uncommitted votes pretty quickly, and I suspect that he'll get a lot of them. It would be futile to try to step in, and I would not do it.

"But if not, I'll try to get the answers to some questions: What is the true state of the uncommitteds? Are they really open, or have they made promises? How solid is Carter's support? What's the feeling toward me among the political leaders—the governors and the state chairman?"

Decision in Week

Depending on the answers to those questions, the former Vice President said, he will decide within a week or so whether to begin trying to rally a bloc of supporters from among the uncommitteds and the backers of candidates who have dropped out of the race.

Already he has begun making telephone calls to friends around the country (he mentioned Senator Thomas F. Eagleton of Missouri and Gov. Thomas L. Judge of Montana), seeking political intelligence.

The draft-Humphrey committee, headed by Joseph F. Crangle of Buffalo, to which the Senator has no official tie, has been canvassing the uncommitted delegates. Mr. Crangle said yesterday that "the overwhelming majority" of almost 400 reached so far say they prefer Senator Humphrey.

Presumably Mr. Humphrey would use the committee as a base if he decided to announce his candidacy, although he said he was not sure of that.

He said that he expected Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California to win in his home state next Tuesday but that he doubted whether Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, who lost his eighth straight primary this week in South Dakota, Mr. Humphrey's native state, would be able to beat Mr. Carter in Ohio.

Fateful Jersey

In the view of Mr. Humphrey and his backers, that makes New Jersey, where Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Brown are the twin choices of the nominally uncommitted slate that is contesting Mr. Carter, a particularly fateful state.

Since his decision not to enter the New Jersey primary, announced at a dramatic and tearful news conference on April 29, the Senator has been to New Jersey more often than any of the announced candidates. He has spent parts of five days here, ostensibly campaigning for Congressional candidates and "fulfilling long-standing commitments," but not incidentally stirring interest in the uncommitted slates.

He reportedly told at least one friend that if the Humphrey-Brown effort here was unsuccessful, he thought his own entry into the contest was highly unlikely.

Even if he does decide to try, Mr. Humphrey said, he is under no illusions about his chances. At a brokered convention, he said, "much of the brokerage would take place among the candidates who entered the primaries, because they are not going to automatically step aside and say, 'watch out, here comes Hubert.'"

Cautious and Careful

"I have to be cautious and careful," he declared. "I'm not interested in flights off the cliff."

Last night, Mr. Humphrey attended a $25-a-person cocktail party in Teaneck, then a $100-a-person reception at the Braidburn Country Club in Florham Park, near Morristown.

As he is so often, the Senator was late for the reception: by the time he arrived, almost two hours behind schedule, the crowd of 200 was flat. Not even Salvatore A. Bontempo, the former state party chairman, could rouse it with a passionate appeal for support for the uncommitted slate "so that when the right moment comes, the bells will toll, flags will fly and voices will yell, 'Hubert Humphrey, Hubert Humphrey, Hubert Humphrey, we want you, we need you!'"

Mr. Humphrey seemed uncomfortable at first, explaining that he was not a candidate, that he was not campaigning, that he wanted party unity.

But finally he hit his stride.

"This race isn't over until the last vote is counted at the convention," he shouted. "Many people on the uncommitted slate are my friends. I'd be a renegade if I hadn't come here to help them raise the resources to compete."

James P. Dugan, the New Jersey Democratic chairman, who assembled the uncommitted slate, said Mr. Humphrey had raised about $20,000, which was desperately needed to help put radio commercials on the air. The slate will have no newspaper advertising because it got started too late.

Brochures were distributed at the reception, and they caused grumbling among some of those who think Mr. Brown would generate more votes here then Mr. Humphrey. The brochures feature a huge photograph of Senator Humphrey and a tiny one of Governor Brown, showing only the back of his head as he greets the Minnesotan.

"There is no coherent operation, no focus," said William Jelin, an uncommitted delegate candidate. "Dugan has a real will to fail."

Here in Cherry Hill this morning, however, there were nothing but cheers and shouts of "We want Humphrey" as the Senator ripped into the Ford Administration before a crowd of officials in the building trades. He was interrupted by applause so often that he said at one point, "Sit down, I've got a couple more pages of good hot stuff here."

It was a vintage performance, a ringing defense of government activism—"a partnership with the American people for constructive good"—that included a recital of the Preamble to the Constitution and ended with these words:

"Whatever we will to do, we can do, so help me God."

a maximum of two can be carried, are sealed, pressurized cylinders with life-support systems. Within them human tests, manufacturing trials and other experiments can be conducted.

The "freight cars" are pallets open to the deep vacuum of space and the heavens beyond. From these automatic or remote-controlled experiments can be performed, such as astronomical observations. As many as five pallets can be carried if there are no manned modules on board.

For the first flight two manned modules are planned plus one or two pallets. While the prime mission will be to test the integrated performance of Spacelab and the Shuttle, a full program of scientific experiments is also projected. In view of the three-year lead time required for bookings, scientists here are already working up proposals.

Missions of 30 Days

At no time will Spacelab be detached from the Shuttle in orbit. While in space the Shuttle will fly with its huge doors fully open to give the laboratory access to the exterior. Each mission will be limited to 30 days.

The modules can carry as many as four experimenters, in addition to the three-man Shuttle crew of captain, pilot and mission specialist. During launchings all passengers must be in the acceleration couches of the Shuttle cabin, which means as many as seven occupants.

The Space lab team will have access to the Shuttle cabin through a tunnel. A hatch in the tunnel with air lock will give access to space and it could later be equipped with the docking system used when the Apollo and Soyuz spacecraft joined in space. This, the only holdover from Apollo Soyuz hardware, would be used for exchanging personnel with another spacecraft.

The hatch will in any case be used for extravehicular activity, such as changing film in telescopes on the pallets or making repairs. There will be handrails along the modules to facilitate movement outside the laboratory.

Communication Link

Spacelab will have no direct communication with the outside. It will depend on the Shuttle for this and other links, requiring a high degree of reliability for electrical connections between the unit being developed here and the Shuttle under construction at the North American plant in Downey, Calif.

For this a special electrical mock-up is to be built. To relay Spacelab and Shuttle communications, NASA is to launch two Tracking and Data Relay Satellites next year. Like other communications satellites they will be in geostationary orbits above the Equator. That is, they will be high enough so that their orbital motion keeps pace with the earth's rotation and they remain geographically stationary.

Spacelab had its birth in 1973, a critical year for European space efforts. It was then that development of a large European launcher system, known as Europa, was abandoned before a full-scale model had been launched.

In a major reorganization the European Launcher Development Organization was abolished and the European Space Agency was formed as an affiliate of the European Space Research Organization.

It was agreed that the new space agency would join in the American space effort by building Spacelab. A project was also initiated to develop Ariane, a launcher smaller than Europa, capable of sending 350 pounds out to a geostationary orbit.

The chief contractor for Ariane is the French space agency and France is paying 64 percent of the cost. Fabrication is concentrated at Toulouse. Britain is carrying chief responsibility for the development of satellites to be launched by Ariane and other vehicles.

Italy is building the Spacelab modules and it was the arrival of the first units from Turin that initiated assembly of the mock-up here. Its role is to insure that all nonelectrical elements of the complex craft mesh in compatible fashion. Four additional Skylab versions are to be built.

The next will be the "high fidelity" model, produced after final design details are agreed on later this year. It will be used for crew training. The next, Engineering Mock-up 1, will be sent to the United States in 1978 for test fitting to the Shuttle.

This will be followed by the Flight Unit, scheduled for shipment to the Kennedy Space Center a year later. Finally, Engineering Mock-up 2 will be built and kept here to help European participants prepare missions over the ten-year operational period.

The first Spacelab flight will follow six or seven test flights of the Shuttle. Spacelab costs have been divided among the 10 European participants with an eye to where the money will be spent. Thus West Germany is contributing 53.3 percent and Italy 18 percent, whereas Austria puts in less than 1 percent.

By the same reasoning, France is carrying the primary load for Ariane.

While developers of Spacelab see in it exciting prospects for scientific discovery and novel industrial processing, they have encountered popular resistance to the expenditures much like those that have affected the space program in the United States.

The Dome's director, Ben Levy, resigned several weeks ago, and Mr. Roemer has been running the Dome from his office in Baton Rouge.

News of the possible sale of the stadium has created only a small stir in New Orleans.

Advertised as the biggest enclosed sports arena in the world, the Superdome has been beset by a progression of troubles that began shortly after its conception slightly more than 10 years ago, continued without respite throughout its construction, and escalated after its completion.

The Dome opened on Aug. 3, 1975, but since then, events scheduled in the huge stadium have been sparse, and by December front-page stories in the daily papers were suggesting that the stadium's money would run out in March and that the stadium would close by April 1.

Closing was averted when Gov. Edwin W. Edwards found a way to shift Dome funds in order to pay for its heavy operating expenses, including electricity bills for 9,000 tons of air-conditioning, and upkeep of its 27-story-tall, 52-acre facilities.

Mr. Roemer said that he had asked the Dome's bond attorney to name a sales price that would "satisfy the bonded indebtedness" of the Dome.

A spokesman for the state Attorney General's office and a lawyer for the Dome said today that serious, complex questions had been raised by the proposed sale of the Dome to private interests.

Charles Kronladge Jr., general counsel for the Dome, commented:

"In essence, the question is, would a sale through a private industry impair the obligation of the bonds?"

Mr. Roemer said that the state was now reorganizing the Dome management to make the stadium more attractive to users and that he believed the state had the ability to run the stadium successfully. But, he said, "Government should be rendering services to people and I doubt if running that type of facility is a function of government."

He said that the state was interested only in a buyer who was competent to run the Dome at a profit as well as to pay for it. "We want to be certain that the people who buy it are able to operate it," he said.

C.I.A. Informs Senate Leaders It Will Resume Destroying Files

WASHINGTON, June 3 (UPI) —George Bush, Director of Central Intelligence, has informed the Senate leadership that his agency intends to resume destroying its records, including those used by Senate intelligence and Presidential commission investigators.

Mr. Bush informed the Senate Democratic leader, Mike Mansfield, of Montana, and the Senate Republican leader, Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, of the agency's intention in a letter written yesterday and released by Mr. Scott's office today.

Mr. Bush said the agency, at the request of Senators Mansfield and Scott, had not destroyed and records, including routine ones, since Jan. 27, 1975, the date the old Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, headed by Senator Frank Church, the Idaho Democrat, was formed.

"The purpose of this letter is to advise you that it is our intention to proceed with destruction of records, now that the Select Committee has completed its investigation and issued its final report," Mr. Bush said. "We have so advised Senator Church.

"Along with the backlog of routine administrative records, the agency will destroy records which were collected and maintained by the agency and which were subject to investigation by the Rockefeller Commission and the Select Committee."

A Presidential commission headed by vice president Rockefeller also investigated abuses of power by the Central Intelligence Agency last year.

Mr. Bush said the agency had to destroy much of the material to comply with executive orders and the 1974 Privacy Act.

"Of course," he said, "all records destruction will be fully consistent with other applicable laws, Presidential directives, and the requirements of pending litigation and Justice Department investigations."

He said he had asked Senators Scott and Mansfield to confirm that they consider the destruction project "necessary and appropriate."

Efficiency Checks Urged

TRENTON, June 3 (UPI) — Energy Administrator Burt L. Ross urged New Jerseyans yesterday to check the energy efficiency of air-conditioners to save electricity and money. He said that most air-conditioners carried information on how efficiently they used energy.

Free Tuition Mainstay Of Eminence for City U.

By GENE I. MAEROFF

For more than a half century, the graduating seniors at City College have risen at the commencement ceremony to recite the Ephebic Oath of Devotion, vowing to "strive to transmit this city not only not less but greater, better and more beautiful than it was transmitted to us."

Part of the greatness that City College graduates have been able to bequeath has been the policy of free higher education, which is now to end.

Some New Yorkers believe the imposition of tuition will diminish both New York City and its university, since free tuition was, after all, the raison d'être for the creation 129 years ago of the "free academy" that became the College of the City of New York.

But free tuition has not been the sole claim to distinction of a university that grew to include 20 campuses and the third largest enrollment in the country. The institution that was established on June 7, 1847, by a 19,305-to-3,490 vote of the citizens has over the years filled a special role in American higher education.

Distinguished Graduates

It has achieved levels of academic excellence most often associated with only a few of the nation's leading private colleges and universities and among its graduates has been a host of famous Americans, including Bernard Baruch, Felix Frankfurter and Dr. Jonas Salk.

"It was a stimulating and wonderful place to teach; even the average students turned out to be good," says Dr. Henry Semat, who retired in 1967 after 48 years in the City College physics department.

Among Dr. Semat's former students is Dr. Robert Hofstadter, one of four Nobel Prize winners produced by the City University.

In more recent years, while struggling to maintain its policy of free tuition, City University has entered a controversial era of open admissions, responding to the social, political and educational realities of a changing city.

Even in its administration of open admissions City University has strived to be different. Unlike the large land-grant universities of the Middle West, which admitted all applicants but made no effort to address their deficiencies, City University launched a remedial program unparalleled in the history of American higher education.

A Question of Time

Moreover, the promise of open admissions for a populace no more than a bus or subway ride from the nearest of 18 undergraduate campuses has been far more meaningful in New York City than elsewhere.

It appeared to many observers, though, that it was just a question of time before the pressure of a surging enrollment — now 270,000 — would prove incompatible with free tuition.

The base of political support for a free university open to all comers was further eroded by what has appeared to some critics to be steadily deteriorating academic standards at an institution that was formerly one of the country's most selective.

"The baccalaureate program at colleges like Brooklyn, Hunter, Queens and City was generally a pursuit of excellence for students who were highly qualified academically when they were admitted," says Dr. Harry D. Gideonse, president of Brooklyn College from 1939 to 1966.

"But this is something that I'm afraid has been lost in the shuffle in recent years, not just because of open admissions, but because of lower standards after they were admitted," Dr. Gideonse adds.

A Time of Clarification

The financial pressures of a city teetering on the brink of bankruptcy have brought modifications to the open-admissions program, which during its six years has vastly increased the proportion of blacks and Puerto Ricans in City University's enrollment.

The institutions that comprise City University have gone through the most troubled period of their existence during the 1970's, a decade in which its mission is still going through clarification.

Faculty morale has suffered from financial and academic uncertainty and, although City University is the highest-paying hinger-education institution in the country and teaching jobs are scarce, many of its professors have been eager to leave.

Dr. Albert H. Bowker, the former City University chancellor who now heads the University of California campus at Berkeley, says that scarcely a day passes that he does not find himself being asked to write letters of recommendations for City University faculty members looking for new posts.

It is ironic that what may be the start of resolving the problems of City University is a step that appears to be bringing the institution closer to the orbit of the State University, a relationship that could lessen the City University's identification with the people of the five boroughs.

'Upward Mobility'

Few institutions of higher education have been so enmeshed in the lives of their constituents as the City University.

City College was the college to which generations of immigrants tied their destiny. "It was a place for beginning upward mobility," says Bernard Malamud, the novelist, who was graduated from City in 1936.

Brooklyn College, Queens College and many of the other colleges founded in the 20th century were to have similar relationships with their boroughs and even their immediate neighborhoods.

"Queens College grew with the borough," says Dr. Joseph S. Murphy, the president of Queens. "It is a lower middle-class borough and the college has reflected that. What open admissions did here was bring in a substantial number of white ethnic students, especially from the parochial schools."

For the time being, the City University remains what is perhaps the last of the nation's municipal universities, a brand of institution that never became widespread in the land.

Other cities—Akron, Toledo, Cincinnati, Wichita, Detroit and Charleston—have seen their municipal universities absorbed into state systems.

"The cities that have tried to support universities have gradually found the tax base was inadequate," says Dr. John R. Everett, the president of the New School for Social Research, who was the first chancellor of the City University, in 1960.

CITY U. PLAN GETS REBUFF IN ALBANY

Anderson, Senate Leader, Sees Bad Precedent

By IVER PETERSON
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, June 3—The State Senate's Republican majority leader, Warren Anderson of Binghamton, today effectively washed his hands of a short-term solution to the City University's funding crisis, blaming the city for allowing the university to overspend its budget and charging that the rescue plan drawn up by Democratic leaders would set a precedent for future fiscal mismanagement by other city agencies.

"I don't have anything to do with reopening CUNY," Senator Anderson said as he emerged from an early evening meeting with the leadership of both houses, at which the Democratic plan to give the university an immediate advance of $24 million, allowing it to reopen, was discussed.

"I feel very bad that CUNY got itself in this posture," he added, "but the city knew about it for nine months or a year before now. It spent itself into this situation and didn't go to City Hall for help but came to the Legislature and said, 'Now, this is what you have to do.' What happens when the next city department overspends itself? Do we have to jump in then, too?"

Solution Still Elusive

Senator Anderson's chilly response to the Democratic Assembly leaders' hopes for Republican support for the plan—without which it could not pass the Senate—closed out three days of searching for a solution to the university's bankruptcy with no evidence of movement toward one.

The action Tuesday by the Board of Higher Education to impose tuition at the university had been expected to trigger an Albany rescue. But the Legislature departed for the weekend, leaving action on the City University crisis to next week at the earliest.

The Democratic leaders' plan to reopen the university already faced numerous obstacles before its chances were further impeded by the Republican leaders' reaction to it today.

Mayor Beame has objected strenuously to the plan's provisions mandating a $160.5 million city contribution to the university next year, and its slowing of the Mayor's plan to withdraw all city aid from the senior colleges by July 1977.

The Governor is reported to be no more than lukewarm, because of the cost to the state, as Albany moves in, under the plan, to pick up the costs of the senior colleges.

And a hardy bloc of city liberal Democrats have withheld their endorsement of the plan while pressing for a city-financed supplemental scholarship program, while some upstate Assembly Democrats insist that no such special provisions are permissible.

Senator Anderson, who Democratic politicians acknowledge holds a "secret veto" of any legislative package through his control of the Senate's Republican majority, maintained that no solution to the City University crisis was possible unless it included consideration of all other higher education programs in the state.

He referred to the State University, one of whose campuses is in his home town, and the private colleges. Governor Carey and the Democratic leaders also want to re-examine the state's total higher education effort, but want to put the City University rescue in motion first.

Senator Anderson's comments today constituted the first public reaction by the Senate Republicans to the efforts of the Democrats in the Assembly and the Governor's office to reopen the university and reorganize its management and financing.

As such, they provide the first glimpse of the political obstacles the rescue effort will face in the Senate, and Mr. Anderson made it plain that his objections are strongest against any special treatment for a city institution that, as even the Democrats acknowledge, mismanaging itself into into a crisis situation.

According to Republican aides, Mr. Anderson objects in particular to the Democratic plan to scrap the city-state matching fund formula for the support of the City University. Since the city is withdrawing its support for the 10 four-year campuses—just when is still a point of contention here—the state's contribution would go down as the city's outlays decrease.

Accordingly, the Democratic plan would scrap the formula in order to allow the state to maintain its $195 million contribution to the City University next year, and to increase it in future years, despite a reduction in the city's share.

Bill to Let Cities Restrict Beaches Gains in Albany

By RONALD SMOTHERS
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, June 3—The New York Senate passed a bill today giving cities the authority to adopt and enforce rules for the use of beaches within their jurisdiction.

During the floor debate, a number of opponents of the bill recalled court challenges to such legislation. They said the measure would authorize cities in Nassau, Suffolk and Westchester Counties to bar members of minority groups from New York City and poor residents.

The bill is unlikely to pass the Democratic-controlled Assembly, with its strong New York City contingent and a large number of black and Puerto Rican legislators.

The bill, which was passed 31 to 23, specifically exempts the city of Long Beach, in Nassau County, whose statute restricting the use of the city beach to residentes was overturned in state courts. It was ruled that the city's restriction was counter to the condition under which the beach area was given to the city. The condition was that it be "dedicated to the public use."

Questioning the intent of the bill, Senator Franz Leichter, Democrat of Manhattan, said: "Isn't the real thrust of this bill to keep all those people from New York City off of the Westchester beaches? You're legislating against poor people."

Senator Carl McCall, Democrat of Manhattan, taking the implications of Mr. Pisani's bill to their extreme, asked if the principle of local control embodied in the bill gave New York City the right to "restrict access to its vast reservoir of jobs" to residents only.

There were these other developments today as the Legislature recessed until Monday.

GROWN IN NEW YORK

Governor Carey signed a bill expanding the new campaign that promotes local agricultural products. Expenses for the publicity campaign, which has proved unexpectedly successful in attracting shoppers to vegetables, fruits, cheese, syrup and wine marked with "Grown in New York" labels, will be largely deferred through income generated by the sale of T-shirts and contributions from growers.

PAY TOILETS

The Appellate Division of State Supreme Court here upheld a year-old state law that bans pay toilets.

SCHOOL USE

Local school boards will be able to authorize the use of school grounds or buildings for noneducational programs during school hours under a bill signed by the Governor.

CHARITIES

Annual registration fees for charitable organizations and professional fund-raisers who are regulated by the state will be increased under a bill signed into law today. The fee for most charities will increase from $5 to $25, and for most fundraisers from $50 to $100.

ADULT HOMES

A package of bills to regulate private proprietary homes for adults was introduced by Assemblyman James W. McCabe, Democrat of Johnson City, and Senator Dale M. Volker, Republican of Depew.

The two legislators said abuses at these homes might rival the documented abuses in nursing homes.

HEARING AIDS

Governor Carey signed into law a bill postponing from June 1 to Sept. 1 the date by which hearing-aid dealers must register with the Secretary of State. The measure was originally passed last year to eliminate widespread abuses, pressured sales tactics and fraud that had been found among the sellers and fitters of hearing aids.

MALPRACTICE INSURANCE

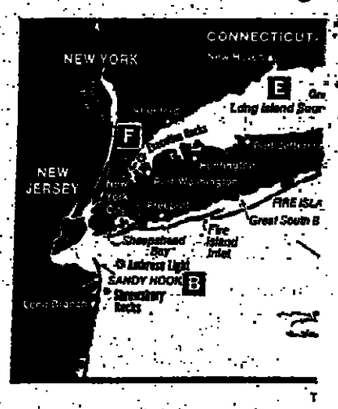
The Senate today passed a bill to require juries in malpractice cases to itemize awards, to limit total awards for pain and suffering to the first $100,000 of an award, establish a Mutual Hospital Malpractice Insurance Company and set up a commission to study broader changes in the state's malpractice insurance laws. The bill is the Republican-controlled Senate's solution to the continuing problem of rising malpractice insurance premiums, but the Democratic-controlled Assembly will consider a different package of bills next week.

The senate also gave initial passage to a proposed state constitutional amendment, sponsored by Senator Tarky Lombardi, Republican of Syracuse, that would allow the Legislature to prescribe procedures other than jury trials to handle malpractice suits.

AIDING PRIVATE BUSINESS

The Senate passed a bill to establish a State Economic Redevelopment Authority that would issue bonds and lend up to $3 billion to private concerns for job-producing expansion or relocation in the state. The bill, sponsored by Senator Jeremiah Bloom, Democrat of Brooklyn, would allow low-interest loans to businesses for modernization if jobs are created. It would also create a body to attempt to attract industry to the state. The bill, modeled in part after the Federal Government's Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which lent more than $50 billion to businesses during the Depression, is given a good chance of passing in the Assembly.

Fluke Are the Prevailing For Anglers in Nearby



AREA A — Fluke is the main catch in the waters off Point Pleasant, N. J., where Dan Zisa hauled in 13 good-sized fish this week aboard the Norma K. III. On Barnegat Ridge, fluke as large as 4½ pounds have been taken with squid and smelt. Occasional bluefish and sea bass of varying sizes are being taken at Long Beach Island where John Falkiewicz reports a lack of action because of a bait strike.

AREA B — From Sandy Hook to Seabright, N. J., striped bass have been plentiful for fishermen trolling or drifting bunkers, with catches up to 30 pounds. Fluke in the 3-to-4-pound range have also been responding to clams, crabs and cut bait. In the same area, blues up to 9 pounds have been taken with bunkers, plugs, butterfish or sand eels. From Sandy Hook to Long Branch, N. J., waning waters are attracting blackfish in the 4-to-5-pound range and clams have been getting good results. In Jones Beach Inlet, fluke have been abundant, with catches up to 18 inches on killies, sand eels, squid and spearing. Occasional blues, up to 9 pounds, have been reported in the same waters. Weakfish have been reported in good numbers in the Fire Island Inlet.

AREA C—Fluke is also the predominant catch here, with much activity reported at Mastic Beach, Shinnecock Inlet and Montauk Point. Claims, sand eels, squid and spearing are bringing in fluke from 2 to 9 pounds. Blues are also beginning to appear in Shinnecock Bay, where 8 to 12 pounders have responded to surgical tubes and umbrella rigs. Sea bass up to 37 pounds have been taken in Shinnecock Inlet with live eels, surgical tubes and plugs. Striped bass have been plentiful in Pollack Rip, the Elbow and Great Eastern Rock to fishermen using wire line, umbrella rigs and drifting diamond jigs. Blue sharks are running about 18 miles south of Shinnecock Inlet and 25 to 30 miles south of Montauk, with numerous catches reported with herring and butterfish.

AREA D—Weakfish averaging 8 to 10 pounds have been running in good numbers in the Brickyard and in the Middleground, west of Jessup Neck. Best results have been with squid on a salty dog or squid on a high-low rig. Porgies have also been abundant around Jessup's Neck with clams and bloodworms attracting 2-pounders. In the Green Lawns on the west side of Shelter Island, fluke have been taken with long strips of squid and live killies. PaPrty boats report night fishing to be exceptionally good out of Greenport, L.I. Their main catches have been weakfish and blues.

Moynihan Backing Off on Senate Bid

By FRANK LYNN

Daniel P. Moynihan has tentatively decided not to seek the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate, friends of the former United States representative at the United Nations said last night.

"He simply doesn't want to do it," said a close friend, adding: "Sure, hed like it but it was not something he lusted after. It was not in his gut."

Politicians who were prepared to support Mr. Moynihan said that Mr. Moynihan "doesn't feel there is a strong demand for him—he will have to fight for the nomination without any assurance he will win."

A Moynihan withdrawal would still leave five likely contenders for the nomination—City Council President Paul O'Dwyer, Representative Bella S. Abzug, Ramsey Clark, the former Attorney General who was an unsuccessful candidate two years ago, Abraham Hirschfeld, another losing aspirant in 1974, and Assemblyman Andrew J. Stein.

The Erie County Democratic chairman, Joseph F. Crangle, Mr. Moynihans principal supporter among New York Democratic leaders, flew here from Washington last night for dinner with Mr. Moynihan and his wife, Elizabeth, and a final attempt to persuade him to run.

Mrs. Moynihan was described by informants as having mixed feelings about her husband's candidacy, but up until now as counseling him to keep his options open.

Crangle 'Out on Limb'

Mr. Moynihan met with Mr. Crangle as "a personal courtesy," said a Moynihan friend, noting that Mr. Crangle "went out on a limb for Pat."

Meanwhile, the Liberal Party policy committee decided last night to recommend Councilman Henry J. Stern of Manhattan to the party's state committee as a temporary Senate candidate.

Presumably, Mr. Stern will withdraw after the Democratic primary in September, when the Liberals are expected to endorse the Democratic candidate.

Mr. Moynihan had seemed an almost certain candidate up until the last few days, according to friends. As late as Wednesday morning, Mr. Crangle, for example, had expected Mr. Moynihan to announce his candidacy next week.

The potential candidacy had been initially hailed by many as a "natural" because of Mr. Moynihan's appeal to Jewish voters, who applauded his stand on Israel, and to his fellow Catholics. Although he resided in Cambridge, Mass., he has always maintained a residence in upstate New York.

However, black Democratic leaders and some liberals quickly mounted a campaign to discredit Mr. Moynihan with allegations that he had been insensitive to blacks in some of his writings—a charge heatedly denied by Mr. Moynihan—and assertions that he was a political chameleon who worked as enthusiastically for President Richard M. Nixon and Gerald R. Ford as for two Democratic Presidents, John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson.

Two other leading Democrats, Governor Carey and his chief political agent, former Mayor Robert F. Wagner, appeared distinctly cool to Mr. Moynihan from the start. They were soon joined by New York City Democratic county leaders, who said they were fearful of antagonizing black and liberal voters.

Group Sets Protest Rally For July 4 in Washington

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP)—The People's Bicentennial Commission announced plans today for an Independence Day rally here intended to attract hundreds of thousands of persons in a protest against big business and big government.

Jeremy Rifkin, director of the group, asserted that the rally would be peaceful, with the crowd to be controlled by his organization's marshals, not the police.

Among speakers expected at the rally are the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson, Jane Fonda, Barry Commoner and Dr. Benjamin Spock, it was announced.

Cubs Add To Woes Of Mets

By JOSEPH DURSO

The Mets skipped town last night for the West Coast after losing to the Chicago Cubs, 2-1, and they left a monumental heap of debris behind: 11 defeats in their last 13 games, 18 in their last 24 and a trail of smashed objects in the locker room.

The chief fragments in most cases were caused by Dave Kingman, who smashed nothing in five trips to the plate during the game and who then released his vexation by smashing his hair dryer, hair-tonic cannister and anything else in sight. He had plenty of reason for self-reproach, too, because he had managed only one single in his last 18 times at bat, nothing in his last 10, no home runs in 10 games, seven strikeouts in four games and 11 teammates left on base in his last two.

Kingman bats cleanup for the Mets because he hits the ball "downtown"—17 home runs and 38 runs knocked home this season before the general collapse of the Mets. But yesterday he hit only one ball past the infield and he left seven runners on base, including the tying and winning runs in the last half of the ninth.

But the 6-foot-6-inch "King Kong" of Shea Stadium had lots of company in his misery: the outfielders and infielders ran together twice, two pinch-hitters failed in the ninth and Mickey Lolich delivered a crucial wild pitch in the seventh inning after picking two Cubs off first base in the sixth.

"It was embarrassing," mourned Joe Frazier, who has managed the Mets for 51 games and who now faces 11 straight in California. "I don't know what to do. We were running together, we don't make simple plays, we even gave them four outs one inning."

Besides Kingman, the most notable hardship case was Lolich, who won three games in the 1968 World Series for the Detroit Tigers during a glittering 14-year career in the American League. Now 35 years old and transplanted, he lost his fourth straight game and his seventh in nine decisions since the Mets endowed him with a two-year contract at $125,000 a summer.

Lolich got behind in the Red Sox, With Tiant, Put Yanks to Rout, 8-2

By PARTON KEESE

Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, June 3—The odds, lady fortune and the big inning opted for the Boston Red Sox tonight. Destined to win at home after having lost two in a row, bound to reverse the tide of solid blows hit right at Yankee fielders and overdue to bunch their hits and walks, the Red Sox did all that and defeated New York, 8-2, behind Luis Tiant.

By winning what Manager Darrell Johnson had termed "the most important game of the year," Boston reduced its margin to seven games behind first-place New York instead of raising it to a back-breaking nine.

"If we lose tonight," Johnson had warned, "it may take us two or three months to catch up, even if we start playing."

By scoring six runs in the second inning, the Red Sox took early command of the game, just as the Yankees had last night with a 5-run second inning. Boston took advantage of three walks and a hit-batsman, which they mixed well with four singles.

Dock Ellis was the principal culprit as the Yankee starter hit Carlton Fisk leading off, walked Dwight Evans, gave up a sharp run-scoring single to Rico Petrocelli and then walked Rick Burleson on four pitches before taking his exit cue from Manager Billy Martin.

Tippy Martinez, the left-hander relief act, provided effective but not lucky as Cecil Cooper bunced one over his head as well as over second base for two runs and Fred Lynn blooped another hit into right field for still another.

With two out, Jim Rice bounced another up-the-middle single through the infield, which brought home two more runs for a healthy 6-2 lead.

The two Yankee runs had come in the top of the first when indications were that they might run away with their third straight victory of the series. Roy White's triple over Lynn's head in center, Chris Chambliss's double and Carlos May's single had Tiant rocking.

With Dick Tidrow, the fourth Yankee pitcher on the mound in the eighth, the Red Sox pushed two more runs across the plate. Cooper's third hit, a single, was followed by Lynn's third hit, a double. Then Yastrzemski gained his first safety of the night, which drove in Lynn.

"That's the type of thing we've been needing," asserted Johnson afterwards. "With Luis pitching like that and our hits falling in like that, it stirs everything up."

The Red Sox also held a pregame talk "to stir things up," according to Johnson. "It wasn't a holler-and-scream type thing," the manager explained, "but rather just a meting to regain our perspective on how to win baseball games."

Evans went further, saying that "it was just to try

Who's Afraid of Bold Forbes? 11 Entered in Belmont Stakes

By STEVE CADY

Angel Cordero wrapped up the disbelief in one word of Spanish yesterday when Laz Barrera told him how many horses had been entered for tomorrow's 108th Belmont Stakes.

"Un-say?" the jockey who rides Bold Forbes said to the colt's trainer in a parking lot at Belmont Park.

What Cordero said is what the Spanish word for 11—once—sounds like in that language. That's how many 3-year-olds were entered for the 1½-mile Belmont. And if "once" is not enough in English, it seemed like way too many in Spanish.

With Bold Forbes listed as a 7-5 favorite in the early line, the Belmont appeared badly in need of a fight promoter with a glib tongue and enough adjectives to build up the challengers.

"Listen," said the candid Campo, "there's no class in the race except Bold Forbes. The rest of 'em are bums."

Later, though, warming to the occasion, Campo injected the missing element of doubt when he predicted that Bold Forbes would not win.

"He's the most legitimate horse in the race," the trainer said, "but the Belmont is too long to be a true test. A mile and a half is a makeup race, and I don't think Bold Forbes can go a mile and a half."

Management representatives winced at Campo's definition of its "Test of the Champion," but they liked the uncertainty he stirred over the outcome.

"Lemme tell you," said Campo, "the trainers are all taking a shot that Laz's colt can't go a mile and a half. That's why you've got so many horses in there."

The big group included five horses, one of them a supplementary nominee, whose names poppedupunexpectedly.

"They came out of nowhere," said Tommy Trotter, racing secretary for the New York Racing Association. "We had no idea until this morning we'd have his many."

The surprise long-shot contenders are Greentree stable's Charleston, Darby Dan Farm's Mullineaux, Orme Wilson's Aeronaut, John Schiff's Quick Card and Mrs. Philip Hofmann's Close to Noon, whose supplementary fees are $2,500 to enter and an additional $10,000 to start.

Also entered, as expected,

Purtzer, 24, Stuns Field, Leads at 65

PHILADELPHIA, June 3 (AP)—Tom Purtzer, playing his first year on the American pro golf circuit, shot a six-under-par 65, surged past a surprised Masters Champion, Ray Floyd, and established a two-stroke lead today in the first round of the $200,000 Bicentennial Classic, formerly known as the Philadelphia Classic.

The 24-year-old Purtzer, who placed second in the Thailand open last year before joining the United States tour, was one of the last of the field to finish on the tight little 6,687-yard Whitemarsh Valley Country Club course.

He made his big move just moments after Floyd, the leader at the time, had observed:

"I play best from the lead. I always have. If I can play that good a first round I don't have anybody to catch. If I'm, say, four strokes behind, sometimes I have to work hard to keep my interest."

Purtzer followed almost immediately with birdies on three of his next four holes, which gave him the first lead of his brief pro career.

With a 67, Floyd suddenly found himself two shots back and tied for second with Randy Erskine, who had to shake off the unnerving experience of watching one of his shots strike and bloody the head of a woman spectator.

"It kind of shook me up," Erskine said. "She was conscious and coherent, so I

"I'm trim," Ali was saying. "I'm fit. I tricked the whole world into thinkin' I was fat and now I'm down to 217."

"You tricked the world?" somebody said. "You mean that scale that said you weighed 230 for Jimmy Young was wrong?"

"Two thirty-five," Ali said blandly. "That was right. I tricked the whole world. Now I'm 217 and I'll weigh 208 for this fight."

"How long since you've weighed 208?"

"Second Liston fight. First Liston." Actually, he weighed 210½ when Sonny Liston, seated, ceded the championship to him 12 years ago. He was 206 in 1965 when Liston fell at his feet and remained there in their second meeting.

The Missing Orator

"I'm in shape," Ali said. "Today I ran from the Americana Hotel clear up into Harlem!"

"Did you draw a crowd?"

"Two hundred. I'm going to do that every day, run up to Harlem and pick up all the drunks, all the addicts, help 'em out. I'm gonna' fight drugs, fight drunks, fight prostitution——"

"You mean the girls are going to run, too?"

"I tricked the whole world. Fat, Young beat me. The press can write anything about me, write about my family, my wife. Give it to me. Give me the stuff makes men jump out windows, it won't hurt me. I'm the lord——"

Mike Burke spoke for the Garden. Cedric Tallis, vice president of the Yankees, said the baseball club was "very much in favor of any event that we can stage for the good of the city." That meant customers at this championship fight would be permitted to trample Yankee Stadium grass, though customers at Frazier-Foreman aren't welcome and neither is the schoolboys' championship baseball game that used to be played there.

Norton said that whenever he beat Ali in the past, Ali always had an excuse but this time "he'll be in perfect shape and I'll be in perfect shape and it'll be a hell of a fight."

"I have just learned," said the Garden's John Condon, "that we aren't going to hear from Ali because he left to catch a plane."

"The main event," said Teddy Brenner of the Garden, "and one of the fighters doesn't show."

"Do you think he'll show up on the ring?" a man asked.

"He has a good record on that score," Teddy said.

"In the first 30 yards," he said, "a guy kept pounding on me on both sides. Well, I guess it was two sides. Last week, in a meet, in Oregon, I was disqualified for hitting back. So I decided to get out of there this time, and before I knew it I was flying down the straightaway. I knew I was going too fast, but I couldn't do anything about it.

"I lost momentum with half a lap to go. I felt all right, and I started thinking about the final."

During the long program at the University of Pennsylvania's Franklin Field, the major casualities were Larry Shipp of Louisiana State, the defender, in the 110-meter high hurdles and James Robinson of California in the 800-meter run.

Except for Robinson, the favorites in the 800 qualified for the semifinals — Horace Tuitt of Florida (the fastest qualifier at 1:48.30), Tom McLean of Bucknell, Orlando Greene of Seton Hall and Mark Belger of Villanova.

Reggie Jones of Tennessee, Harvey Glance of Auburn, Ed Preston of Arkansas State and James Gilkes of Southern California advanced to the semifinals of the 100-meter and 200-meter dashes.

Earl Bell of Arkansas State was among the 13 qualifiers in the pole vault. Bell won this meet last year, and last Saturday he raised the world's record to 18 feet 7¼ inches.

When the pole-vault qualifying started at 16 feet 6 inches, Bell was sitting in the stands, unsure whether to pass that height and wait for 17 feet. When many others failed at 16-6, he went back to the field, cleared 16-6 by a foot and returned to the stands.

There were 1,573 entries from 154 colleges, but not all got here. Some failed to meet qualifying standards, and others had tales of woe.

One was Dave Albritton, the University of Hawaii junior who holds the world record of 71 feet 8¼ inches in the shot-put. Hawaii entered four athletes in the meet, but none appeared. Albritton supposedly is injured.

Another was Edwin Moses, a junior at Morehouse College in Atlanta. Last year, he ran the only 400-meter hurdles race of his life. This

If all start, the third and longest leg of racng's Triple Crown will provide a gross purse of $195,000, with $117,600 to the winner.

Barrera, conceding he was "surprised" by the size of the field, said he doubted that either the traffic or the post position (No. 9) drawn by Bold Forbes would bother his front-running colt.

The More the Wealthier

"Eleven horses only mean more money for the guy who win it," said the 51-year-old trainer. "My horse is completely sound. I cannot lie to you. He will go to the lead. The other trainers, they figure they got a chance at a mile and a half. You can't blame them for taking a chance."

Bold Forbes backers, who insisted their hero would win "from here to Staten Island," offered several theories to explain the large field.

"With Honest Pleasure and Elocutionist out of the race," one admirer of the favorite said, "most of these horses are shooting for second, third and fourth money."

Honest Pleasure, the beaten favorite in both the Derby and Preakness, and Elocutionist, the Preakness winner, undoubtedly would have kept the Belmont field thin had they been entered. Eight of the 11 contestants have never won a stakes, and four have never even run in one.

Some of them, the way form players see it, have less chance against Bold Forbes than Chuck Wepner, Jean-Perro Coopman and Richard Dunn had in the ring against Muhammad Ali.

Three of the surprise candidates, for example, had already been assigned relatively low weights for tomorrow's Annapolis Handicap, a 1-1/16-mile grass race for 3-year-olds at Pimlico. Quick Card was weighted at 117 pounds, Close to Noon at 111 and Charleston 108. Now each will carry 126 pounds against Bold Forbes in the Belmont.

For at least some of the owners, the Belmont seemed to represent a chance for little more than a weekend of fun. Yet the uncertainty was there, the suspicion that Bold Forbes might run so fast in the early part of the race that he would falter in the stretch, as he did in the Preakness.

"I'd be very surprised if Bold Forbes wins at a mile and a half," said Phil Phonson, the trainer whose colt, Quiet Little Table, beat Charleston here last Wednesday. "I'd look for a closer like Play the Red or Great Contractor. It's a tough race. That's why we stayed out of it."

A Winner for Baeza

Braulio Baeza reached the winner's circle at Belmont Park yesterday in his first riding activity since May 16.

Baeza, fined $500 last week by the stewards for failing to meet jockey commitments, had missed 14 days of racing. He scored with one of his four mounts yesterday, taking the third race aboard Yudy Eye at $13 for $2.

The millionaire jockey will ride favored Optimistic Gal today in the Mother Goose Stakes, the second part of the New York Racing Association's triple crown series for 3-year-old fillies. Optimistic Gal, owned by Mrs. Bertram Firestone, was established as a 4-5 favorite in the overnight line for the 1 ⅛-mile race.

Dearly Precious, who defeated Optimistic Gal in the Acorn Stakes last time out, was listed as the even-money second choice in a field of five.

Harnum Takes Old Job

SELINSGROVE, Pa., June 3 (AP)—Dan Harnum was named basketball coach at Susquehanna University today, a position he held five years ago. Harnum resigned as basketball coach at the University of Delaware to return to Susquehanna, where he compiled a 23-23 won-lost record over two seasons, 1969-71. Harnum had a 69-57 record in five seasons at Delaware.

Coach Attles to Be General Manag[er]

While basketball coaches all around him are losing their jobs, Al Attles of the Golden State Warriors has been given some added responsibilities. It was announced yesterday that Attles, in addition to coaching, would assume the position of general manager of the team and be responsible for scouting and drafting. He succeeds Dick Vertlieb, who left to join the Seattle major league baseball expansion team that will begin play next season. Attles led Golden State to last season's National Basketball Association championship, but the Warriors were eliminated from the playoffs this season by the Phoenix Suns. Franklin Mieuli, the Warrior's owner and president, also announced that Gordon (Scotty) Stirling would become the assistant to the president, and would run the day-to-day operations of the team.

"If you don't cooperate sexually, you don't get the mounts — it's that simple," said Donna Hillman, the attractive 27-year-old jockey who says she is quitting the sport because a female rider can't succeed unless she submits to sex with trainers and others in the racing establishment. She said she planned to train and possibly breed horses, and that she might write a book exposing the tracks as "a hooker's paradise."

"I'm not saying they're all that way, but there's enough that they're ruining the sport," says Miss Hillman. "There are more women coming on the track today who have made a lot of wrong moves to obtain their rides. In return, they have made it tougher on the others. Ninety percent of racing is a good horse. You wouldn't believe the bums I've ridden. Impossible horses no one else would touch. Very seldom did I get a chance to ride a horse that belonged in the field he ran in."

fastest time (48.8 seconds) for that race.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association is divided into three divisions, with most of the sport powers in Division I. Morehouse is in Division III, made up mostly of small schools so Moses had to run in the Division III championships and finish first or second to qualify for this meet.

He was far in front when he fell in the rain and banged into a hurdle. He got up and finished third, barely missing second place. So, world's fastest hurdler or not, he could not compete here.

6 Finals Slated Today

Yesterday, when Ed Miller of California won the decathlon, the day was cold and wet. Today, when the running events began, it was 74 degrees and mostly sunny.

There were trials scheduled in 17 events, but three trials were scratched because of insufficient entries. There will be six finals and more trials tomorrow and the last 14 finals on Saturday.

The track has a Proturf top on a 9-year-old Tartan base. Proturf and Tartan are plastic-like all-weather surfaces. They are perfectly smooth and they are springy and kind to the legs. Most major meets, including the Olympics, are held on such surfaces which make times faster and runners happier.

Devon Title To Hunter From Coast

DEVON, Pa., June 3—Modest Man, owned by the Lakeside Ranch of Morgan Hill, Calif., won the green conformation hunter class today at the Devon horse show and clinched the division championship.

Ridden by Mrs. Linda Hough, Modest Man amassed 18 points, with one class remaining to be contested. Jane Womble's Henry the Hawk and Mrs. Peter Platten's Take Aim were tied for second place with 8 points each.

"We had a pretty good conformation hunter once before," said the 32-year-old Mrs. Hough. "That was Spindletop Showdown, who won just about everything. We renamed him Showdown when he came to us from Marvin Van Rapoport in New York.

"We obtained Modest Man as a yearling and he has been in competition only once in California. He won the championship and we decided to bring him East because we thought he could win here. We have entered him in the Ox Ridge Hunt Club show in Connecticut in two weeks."

English Choice, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Neil B. Eustace of Stonington, Conn., and handled by Melanie Smith, won the intermediate jumper class.

THE CHIEF AWARDS:

Green Conformation Hunters — Lakeside Ranch's Modest Man.
Fine Harness Horses—Mrs. Kenneth Wheeler's Special Entertainer.
Single Pony Roadsters, Amateur—Chet Cable's Super Fly.
Five-Gaited Saddle Horses—Mrs. Jean McLean Davis's Big Time.
Junior Fine Harness Horses—Julianne Lynch's Diamond Minx.
American Saddlebred Three-Gaited Pleasure—Maudie L. Smith's Glowing Bourbon.
Hackney Ponies—Mr. and Mrs. Duane Miller's Apollo's Creation.
Intermediate Jumpers—Mr. and Mrs. Neil B. Eustace's English choice.
Green Working Hunter Stake, Second Year—Susan P. Barrow's Pot de Creme.
Green Working Hunter Championship, Second Year—Champion, Gail M. Sullivan's Touch The Sun, 15 points; Reserve, Mrs. David L. Guyer's Russian Caviar, 11.
Regular Conformation Hunters—The Meadow's Market Rise.
Open Jumpers—Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Butler's Old English.
Harness Ponies—Ward Acres Farms' Command's Paradine.

Start Gate Ends Race

CHICAGO, June 3 (AP) — The second race at Arlington Park was declared no contest today after the starting gates became stuck across the track near the stands after the race began. As the 12 horses and jockeys pounded toward the finish, an outrider stationed midway down the stretch, waved his arms and herded the jockeys toward the rail.

There was a 15-foot opening between the rail and the gate.

The track announcer also warned the riders by calling out, "Pull up, pull up, stick to the rail, the starting gate can't be moved."

There was booing from the stands after the race but it stopped when it was announced that the race was no contest. A total of $121,383 was refunded.

"The front wheels on the gate locked," Jim Kinnard, the starter explained later. "The two tractors couldn't budge it." The tractors finally moved the gate away and another was used for the rest of the races.

In last night's game there were 64 personal fouls called by the referees, Manny Sokol and Don Murphy, 34 on Boston and 30 on Phoenix. In Sunday's Phoenix victory, with another pair of referees, there were 65 calls, 34 against Boston and 31 against the Suns. The N.B.A. record for fouls in a playoff game is 70, a mark reached in Boston-Los Angeles games in both 1962 and 1965.

For comparison of the effect of the fouls on the score, the Suns took 39 free throws last night and made 31. In the first game of the series in Boston, an easy 98-87 victory by the Celtics, the Suns had 15 free throws and made 11. Though part of the difference is the Suns' increased willingness to drive for the basket here, Heinsohn thinks a change in refereeing standards is another part.

The spate of foul calls in the last two games has clearly affected the Boston defense. Under normal circumstances, Boston's pressing defense consists of the two guards harassing their opposite numbers with pushes and hand-checks while Dave Cowens drapes himself over Alvan Adams, the Suns' rookie center, at the high post and the two Boston forwards keep their men outside with shoulders, elbows and forearms. After Phoenix took 20 foul shots in the first quarter last night (and made 19), Boston appeared to play back more from their defensive assignments.

"They're forcing us out of our regular game," said Heinsohn of the close calling by the referees. "We're a pressing team, and when we can't press, we're in trouble."

Though the foul calls in the last two games have fallen approximatelly equally on both teams, they appear often to come at different points in the play. Boston generally seems to get caught early, as the Suns' pattern offense is developing.

The Suns are often called for a foul later in their opponents' 24 seconds, when a play is nearly completed and there is a man free for a shot. The latter point is when most fouls in professional basketball are called.

There is some suspicion that the N.B.A. tries to clean up its act in the playoffs, when the games are on national television. The idea would be for officials to call games more closely, making it seem that professional basketball is a game of finesse rather than size and strength. One of the most frequently heard criticisms of the two professional leagues is that only giants can play in them.

John Nucatola, the supervisor of N.B.A. referees, denies there is any such attempt. There are no special efforts to control the playoffs, and no special instructions," he says. "I tell my men to watch the things like use of hands, I always tell them to watch. I said to let them play if they want to play, and if not, give 'em hell."

The series returns to Boston tomorrow night for the fifth game. The sixth game will be at Phoenix on Sunday afternoon and the seventh, if necessary, at Boston next Wednesday.

Heinsohn said he didn't know if the return home would change the officiating. "I don't have the vaguest idea," the coach said. "Something crazy is going on here, but I don't know what it is."

Cowens, for one, is weary of talking about referees. "I've never been in a series where there's been so much emphasis on officiating," the center said. "It's ridiculous, I think. They're not the ones that put the ball in the basket or miss the last-second shots."

9 OUT OF 10 STILL ON THE ROAD

's true. 9 out of 10 Toyota cars sold in this country in the last 18 years are still on the road.

Some reasons why:

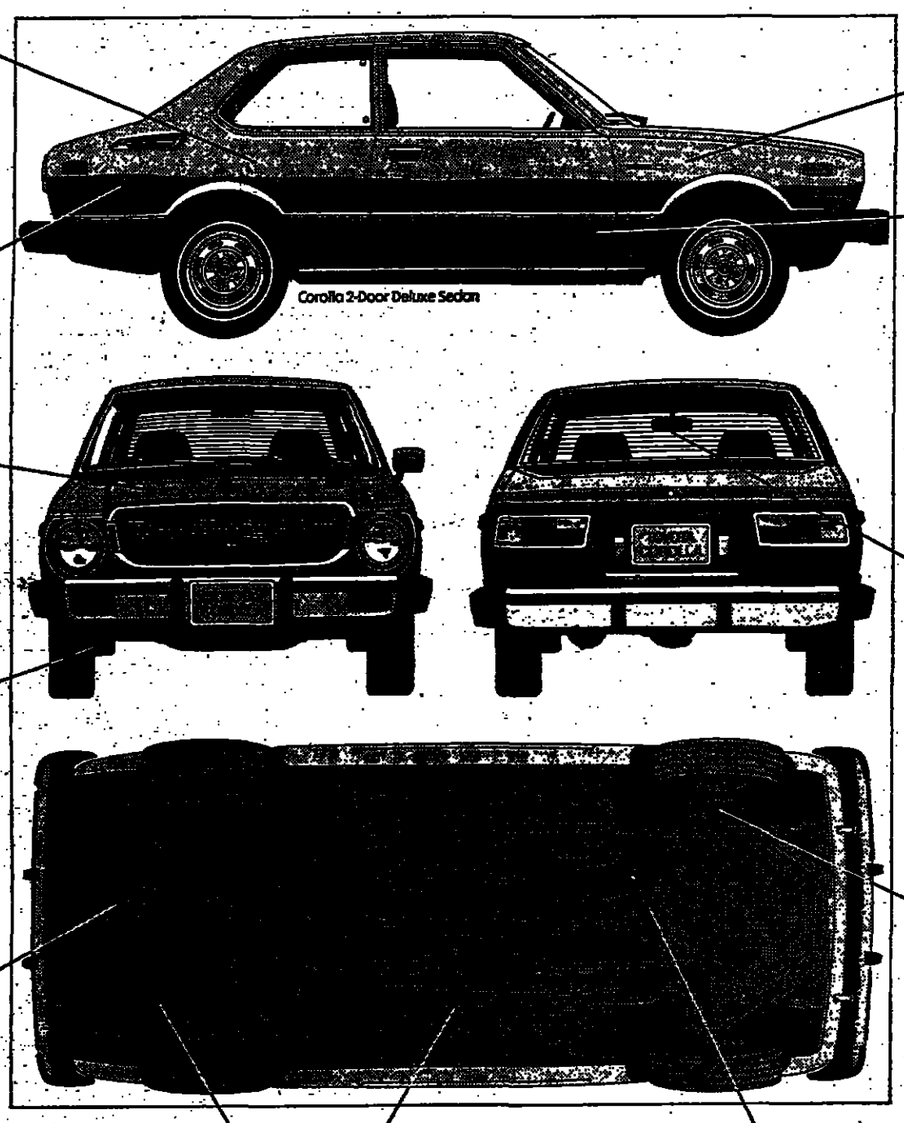
ity finish. The paint yota Corolla is thick, able and lustrous. A inish that'll last. And olla's beautiful color n, we're sure there's eally take a shine to.

uality can be seen in value. Check the in- of this paper and find r yourself just how well orollas hold their value.

uality automobiles have ality service. There are nearly 1,000 authorized yota dealers across the S. forming a network of rvice departments with rly trained mechanics.

example of a qual- re. An exceptionally standard feature in is is the sure, power d front disc brakes. rakes that slow and you with precision.

uality is a thought out gn. A good example of lla's thoroughness and tion to detail is found in spare tire placement: placed under the trunk to provide a maximum of usable trunk space.



The start of quality. Toyota's unit body welded construction fuses body panels together to form one solid, rugged body. Welded construction eliminates nuts and bolts that otherwise could rattle, vibrate or even fall off. Corolla bodies are built tough to last.

Toyota built-to-last quality runs across the entire Corolla line. The line of six cars offers a wide variety of choices. If you only need two doors there's the 2-Door Sedan, the 2-Door Deluxe Sedan and the Hardtop. If you need 4 doors there's the 4-Door Deluxe Sedan. Need more room? Then there's the 5-Door Wagon. And if you're looking for something with more pizazz there's the sporty equipped SR-5.

Safety is a major consideration in the building of a quality car. Especially Toyota. For example, Toyota's safety features include brake fluid-level warning light, collapsible steering column, fire-retardant interior, soft trim and steel side-door guard reinforcement.

Quality takes a firm stance. All Toyota Corollas feature MacPherson strut front suspensions, a sophisticated front end design also found on our sporty Celica line. This suspension gives Corolla surprisingly responsive handling characteristics.

One proof of quality. Toyota quality is exemplified by the fact that there were more Toyota Corollas produced in 1975 than any other car in the whole world. That's just part of the reason why we're confident enough to make this statement: If you can find a better built small car than a Toyota...buy it.

Protecting quality. All Toyota Corollas are delivered from the factory with an anti-rust under-sealant to help combat corrosive road chemicals. It's not something you pay extra for. And aluminized mufflers give added life to this critical part of the exhaust system.

The heritage of three quality transmissions. Toyota gearboxes are designed and built with the same technology and expertise that goes into our super rugged Toyota Land Cruiser. And you choose the transmission that best meets your driving needs: a 4-speed synchromesh, 3-speed automatic or 5-speed overdrive.

YOU ASKED FOR IT. YOU GOT IT IN 6 COROLLA MODELS.

Larry Bittner of the Cubs slides home safely with the tiebreaking run in the seventh of Mets' game at Shea. Jerry Grote is the Mets' catcher. Umpire is Bruce Froemming.

Cubs Heighten Mets' Woes

third inning after he surrendered a single to Ray Burris, who got to the Cubs after a brief start as a batting-practice pitcher. Then Rick Monday walked, Jose Cardenal singled and it was 1-0.

In the fifth, Wayne Garrett doubled and Ed Kranepool singled to pull the Mets even, but Kingman waved at a third strike with Kranepool at second and that was all they got. Things looked better in the sixth, though; when Lolich pulled his pickoff trick — he caught Cardenal after a walk and Manny Trillo after an infield single. But the Mets, meanwhile, were leaving the bases loaded in the first and sixth innings, and they paid for it when the Cubs batted in the seventh.

The trouble started with one down when Dave Rosello singled through the left side of the infield. He was forced at second, but then Mick Kelleher tried to bunt him along and Lolich cooperated by bouncing the pitch off home plate. With two out and a runner on second, Frazier trotted to the mound for a consultation, returned to the dugout and tore his hair while Kelleher singled to right field for a 2-1 lead. It was only the fifth run Kelleher had batted home all season.

"I went out," the manager reported later, "and asked if he wanted to pitch to this guy or walk him and work on the pitcher or a pinch-hitter. He said, 'Hell I can get this guy out.' He didn't."

As maddening as that was, Frazier endured an even worse moment in the Mets' ninth. John Milner, riding the bench with a strained leg muscle, pinchhit and grounded out trying to check his swing. Mike Phillips walked, Burris was replaced by the left-handed Darold Knowles and the Mets countered with the right-handed Jack Heidemann, who flied out to right.

But then Felix Millan pinch-hit a slice down the right-field line and was awarded a double when Larry Bittner, first baseman, blocked the baseline between first and second.

So the game was put up to Kingman again. But Oscar Zamora came out of the Cubs' bull pen, struck him out on wide sweeping pitches and sent the Mets west in a basket.

"In Detroit, when we went into a slump," recalled Lolich, who suffered through a 19-game slide with the Tigers last year, "we'd sit back and wait. It was a power club. But here with the Mets, we have to put together a lot of base hits to score runs. We had guys running together there, too. After a while, we thought that was the way the game's played."

Red Sox Trounce Yankees

to take some pressure off of us and to make us realize we were just human beings and that one person shouldn't try to do it all himself. Just play our game, do our job as a team and we'd win was what it was all about."

Carbo to Brewers

After the game, the Red Sox traded Bernie Carbo, an outfielder, to the Milwaukee Brewers for Bobby Darwin, an outfielder, and Tom Murphy, a right-handed relief pitcher.

Murphy was the player sought by Boston, which had not replaced Bill Lee, their injured left-hander. The 30-year-old Murphy pitched for California from 1968 to 1972, when he was traded to Kansas City. The Royals traded him to St. Louis Cardinals in 1973, from where he was sent to the Brewers. He has a 55-82 career won-lost mark.

Darwin, once a pitcher, has played the outfield for the last five years. He holds a .256 career batting average.

Brewers Halt Tigers' 4-Game

By DEANE McGOWEN

Bill Travers, a left-hander, won his fourth consecutive game, and Don Money and Robin Yount furnished the power at the plate as the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Detroit Tigers last night, 6-2, in Tiger Stadium.

The triumph was the first for the Brewers after four straight losses to the Tigers in the series. Travers, though tagged for nine hits, ran his record to 6-2 won-lost with the help of three double plays.

Money tripled in a run in the fifth inning after a single by Charlie Moore, then scored when George Scott doubled. Leading off the seventh, Money smacked his seventh homer of the year and third of the series.

Yount's two runs batted in were the result of sacrifice flies—the first following a triple by Sixto Lezcano in the fourth, the second scoring Scott in the seventh after Scott walked and advanced to third on a single and a ground shot.

The Tigers got their first run in the seventh off Travers when Bill Freehan hit a double that popped out of Jim Rosario's glove in left field. Freehan moved to third on a wild pitch, and scored on a ground ball by Aurelio Rodriguez. Detroit added its last run in the ninth on Ron LeFlore's single.

Dave Roberts, who started for the Tigers, lasted 4 2/3 innings, and saw his record even out at 4-4.

losing streak. Stanhouse drilled a two-run single in the second inning to start Jim Rooker on his way to his first loss in his last six decisions. Rooker is now a 6-2. Jim Dwyer and Gary Carter drove in two runs apiece. Stanhouse (3-1) collected his first victory as a starter, and pitched his first complete game since 1973 when he worked for the Texas Rangers.

Borg, Solomon, Dibbs Adva

PARIS, June 3 (UPI)—Bjorn Borg, in pursuit of his third straight French Open tennis title, lost only four games today in leading the favorites, including Harold Solomon and Eddie Dibbs of the United States, into the third round of the $210,000 championship.

Borg, seeded first, ousted an Austrian Davis Cup player, Hans Kary, 6-1, 6-1, 6-2, on the dusty center court of Roland Garros Stadium.

Solomon, jointly seeded fifth with Dibbs, was extended before eliminating Sashi Menon of India, 6-4, 6-4, 3-6, 4-6, 6-2. "I played stupidly," Solomon said.

Dibbs defeated Hans Pohmann of West Germany, 6-3, 7-5, 6-1, at one point throwing his racquet to the umpire's chair when he dropped his service in the second set. The match official, Bertie Bowron of Britain, sat impassively as the racquet bounced back onto the court.

Another American, Victor Amaya, also advanced. The powerful server beat Hans-Juergen Plotz of West Germany, 6-3, 6-3, 6-4.

Meanwhile, Adriano Panatta, who won his native Italian title last Sunday, defeated Jun Kuki of Japan, 6-2, 6-3, 7-5. And Manuel Orantes, the current United States Open champion, beat a fellow Spaniard, Antonio Munoz, 2-6, 6-3, 6-4, 6-1.

Other second-round victors included Jiri Hrebec of Czechoslovakia, who ousted Victor Pecci of Paraguay, 4-6, 6-3, 6-4, 6-2; Belus Prajoux of Chile, who defeated Byron Bertram of South Africa, 6-4, 2-6, 6-4, 6-0; Ricardo Cano, who won an all-Argentinian match against Enrique Caviglia, 6-1, 3-6, 6-2, 5-7, 6-1, and Wojtek Fibak of Poland, who eliminated Patrick Proisy of France, 6-4, 1-6, 6-2, 6-3.

In a first-round match carried over from yesterday because of bad light, Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia came from a set down to defeat Patrice Dominguez of France, 4-6, 7-will stage its first title bout since 1959, when Floyd Patterson faced Ingemar Johanson.

Fun City Recaptures Ring Glow

Ali and Norton will meet Sept. 28, with fans who can pay up to $200 a seat permitted in the infield next to the ring. Ali will earn at least $6 million and Norton will take home a minimum of $1.1 million.

The total purse, said Mike Burke, president of the Garden, could be $10 million.

The Garden is promoting Rank, the closed-circuit experts and, in a sense, Governor Carey.

Big-time fights have been lost to the state because of tax laws that took a piece of the fighters' earnings on out-of-state television receipts. The Governor helped alleviate the tax burden on the fighters.

So James A. Farley Jr., the State Athletic Commission chairman, was busy yesterday watching Ali and Norton in one place and Frazier in another.

I have found since I got this job," he said, "that it is very difficult to get two fighters together. I am glad we got this for the State of New York."

"We're delighted for the city," said Burke, who then perhaps thought of the Garden's stockholders and its image. "And we're happy for ourselves at Madison Square Garden. This re-establishes us as a major factor in boxing."

The Ali-Norton bout will interfere only minimally with the sensitive Yankee Stadium grass. The Yankees—especially George M. Steinbrenner 3d, their chief owner—refused to allow the Frazier-Foreman bout there this month because of possible damage to the field.

But the Sept. 28 date, a Tuesday night, permits two days off before the Yankees return home—and then the regular season ends. And if the Yankees are in the division playoffs, the field still will not take a pounding since the playoffs begin in the Western Division city.

Bob Biron, Norton's manager, spoke in the first-person plural that managers have always used in describing their fighters.

"We like to come to New York," said Biron. "Particularly since they changed the tax laws."

Ali did not wait to address a news conference at the Garden. He had to leave for Chattanooga, Tenn., where he owns a factory that makes prayer rugs.

lax. It's disappointing Harvard isn't here because even if we win again it won't mean anything to other people on account of we didn't beat the best. I think we could beat Harvard with one more chance."

The Badgers had two chances this season placing fourth to the Crimson in the San Diego invitation regatta late in March and second to the Sons of Harvard in the Eastern sprint championships at Princeton last May 16.

So this is the sport in which the best does not show up for the national championship. But no sport can touch crew as to its eccentricities. How many coaches does one come across who keep bees as a hobby? That's the avocation of Randy Jablonic of Wisconsin, who is more eloquent about his apiary than his crew. So anonymous are oarsmen that their coaches sometimes are not sure of the names. One coach has changed his lineup so often he said today he did not remember who was now rowing in the No. 6 seat but the boat was "going a lot faster."

None of the varsity crews rowed especially well in the heats and Askins, the Wisconsin stroke, suggested a reason. He said, "It was really a beautiful day, so nice a day maybe no one felt like rowing. They would rather just be hanging around."

Associated Press

Joe Noonan of the Penn crew bends forward in exhaustion, his foot in the water, after Penn was beaten by Wisconsin in qualifying heat of national intercollegiate rowing championships, held on Lake Onondaga.

Special to The New York Times

MAMARONECK, N.Y., June 3—Top-seeded Marilyn Aschner and Betty Newfield, a 14 year-old from Jackson Heights Queens, won quarterfinal matches today in the women's New York State tennis championship.

Miss Aschner, the defending champion from Great Neck, L. I., defeated Cathy Mueller of Glen Ridge, N. J., 6-3, 7-6, and tomorrow will face seventh-seeded Miss Newfield, who surprised third-seeded Mimi Kanarek, a former Eastern champion from Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y., 6-1, 6-1.

In other quarterfinal matches, Carolyn Stoll, Livingston, N. J., seeded fourth, defeated fifth-seeded Stacy Bowman, Bedford, N. Y., 6-4, 6-2, and Cindy Johnson, Spring Lake, N. J., seeded sixth, routed Lisa Levins, 15 years old, of Massapequa, L. I., 6-0, 6-2.

Special to The New York Times

BRONXVILLE, N.Y., June 3—Top-seeded Louis Vallejo, a freshman from St. John's University, advanced to the final of the Metropolitan College Tennis Conference championship today with a 7-6, 6-1 victory over Hector Munoz of Iona.

Don Habe of Hofstra, runner-up for the last two years, also moved into the final with a 7-5, 7-6 triumph over third-ranked Rick Liebman of St. John's.

Haber, rated No. 2, rallied from a 0-40 deficit in the 10th game of the second set to get even at 5-5. And went on to take the tiebreaker, 5-2.

guess she's O.K. but she was bleeding something awful."

The woman was taken to a hospital for precautinary X-Rays.

Frank Beard, Jim Simons and Mike McCullough were at 68, and Billy Casper headed a group at 69.

While some of the game's obscure names were shouldering their way to the front, sevral more well-known performers were encountering difficulties despite mild, sunny weather and excellent playing conditions.

Last year's winner, Tom Jenkins, shot a 77 and must improve to make the cut for the last two rounds. Johnny Miller double-bogeyed his first hole and had to birdie two of his last three for a one-over-par, 72.

Hubert Green, the season's leading money-winner and holder of three 1976 victories, struggled to a 76. Ben Crenshaw was well back at 72. Roger Maltbie, winner of last week's Memorial tournament, had to play the back nine in 33 for a round of 71.

Jack Nicklaus, Arnold Palmer, Gary Player, Lee Trevino and Tom Watson are not competing in this event.

Floyd had his best performance since his Masters victory. He stroked his approaches to within less than three feet on three holes, all of which he birdied, sank a four-foot putt for an eagle-3 after a 3-iron approach and made his longest putt (18 feet) to save a par.

Giles and Siderowf British Golf Victors

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, June 3 (UPI)—Vinny Giles, the defending champion needed just 28 holes of golf today to win two matches that put him into the quarterfinals of the British Amateur championship in his bid to become the first American to win sucessive titles since Lawson Little 41 years ago.

Dick Siderowf, the 1973 champion from Westport, Conn., and Jim Gabrielsen, the 1974 runner-up from Atlanta, joined Giles in the quarterfinals, but John Cain of Houston and Alan Pate of Mobile, Ala., were eliminated.

In the fourth round, the 33-year-old Giles, a Richmond attorney turned golf manager, crushed Sandy Dunlop of England, 6 and 5, and returned to the St. Andrews Old Course after lunch to eliminate another Englishman, Mike Kelley, 4 and 3.

In tomorrow's quarterfinals, Giles meets his toughest test to date in John Davies, a British Walker Cup star. Davies defeated Cain, 2 and 1, in the fifth round.

Siderowf defeated Graham McIntyre of Canada on the 20th hole in the fourth round, then rallied to oust David Long of England 2 and 1. Gabrielsen beat Pat Mulcare of Ireland, 2 and 1, before being taken to the 20th hole in the fifth round by Peter Deeble of England.

Pate bowed, 3 and 2, to Ian Carslaw of England in the fifth round.

Giles, who finished three under par for 13 holes in the morning, was unhappy with his subsequent golf.

"I hit a lot of ugly shots after the eighth hole in the afternoon," he said, "and my legs were beginning to get very tired. When that happens, my swing goes. Maybe it was because I didn't sleep too well last night. I spent five hours trying to get a trans-Atlantic telephone call through, and when I eventually gave up trying I slept only in patches."

In the quarterfinals, Siderowf meets Bill Patterson of Britain and Gabrielsen is paired with Alan Brodie, another Briton.

Siderowf recovered well to defeat Long after being 2 down at the sixth and 1 behind at the 11th. He took the lead for the first time at the 14th, when Long drove out of bounds.

Facts on Fringes . . .

Did you know:

• That for every $3 New York City spends on base pay, it contributes another $2 in fringe, leave and retirement benefits—roughly twice the amount that other large cities spend on such supplemental emoluments?

• That the city is spending $292 million this year for the most extensive and expensive employee health program in the country—as much as $1,177 annually for a single employee and his family?

• That the city continues to pay health benefits after retirement, even when an employee retires young enough to begin a second career which also provides health benefits?

• That the city provides uniform allowances to 93,000 employees, including many who are required to wear no uniforms such as detectives and puppeteers? (New York has 11 puppeteers on its payroll who receive $195 a year for uniforms.)

• That municipal employees are granted four weeks annual leave from the time they go to work, five weeks after seven years; that policemen get two days off for each pint of blood they donate and that firemen are given time off to attend the annual conventions of veterans organizations?

These are just a few of the shocking facts about New York's incomparable—and insupportable—employee benefits as documented in a carefully researched report of the Temporary Commission on City Finances, chaired by former State Supreme Court Justice Owen McGivern.

The report could not be more timely, coming as it does on the eve of critical negotiations with municipal labor unions and during a period when the city is under increasing pressure from Federal and state officials to produce fresh economies to reinforce its endangered financial plan.

The commission's recommendations for fringe reductions estimated to save $97 million next year and for leave benefit reforms that would provide the equivalent of 9,000 additional city workers strongly support the recent contention of the Senate Finance Committee that New York should and can achieve substantially higher savings in this area than the $24 million budgeted for next year.

The report gives city officials the hard factual information they need—and have so sorely lacked in the past—to bargain effectively for these essential cost reductions. At the same time, it offers the possibility of additional savings sufficient to offset modest cost-of-living increases for city workers during this austerity year under the restrictive pay formula recently laid down by the Emergency Financial Control Board.

Union leaders are furious over the report because for the first time it spells out in stark detail for ordinary citizens the ridiculous extremes and costs of the benefits that have been given away by public officials during years of secretive labor negotiations.

That knowledge offers power to the people of New York, power their elective leaders must now exercise to demand downward revision of employee benefits to levels that are more in keeping with the benefits enjoyed by other public and private employees, here and elsewhere—to levels that a near-bankrupt city might be able to afford.

. . . More on Pensions

In a report issued earlier this week, the Temporary Commission spelled out additional savings of at least $135 million that New York City could achieve over a period of time by reforming its cumbersome and costly pension systems.

The pension report and its conclusions essentially reinforce the recommendations for pension reform already put forward by the State (Kinzel) Commission on Pensions and the Mayor's Management Advisory Board (Shinn). It offers another powerful argument for urgent, comprehensive action by the Governor and the State Legislature. Unfortunately, neither the Governor nor the Legislature appears in the least disposed to act in this election year.

A certain amount of inaction on other matters, however, could be highly beneficial, as the Temporary Commission points out in calling on the Legislature not to extend the increased-take-home-pay benefit (cost to the city: $93 million) or the notorious "heart bill" ($17 million). In addition, the commission urges city officials not to grant the superfluous and possibly illegal union annuity funds (at least $24 million) in its current round of collective bargaining with employee unions.

These could be constructive first steps toward the broader pension reform which Judge McGivern has observed "is absolutely essential if the city is to be able to balance its budget in the next few years."

Decline of the Pound . . .

With Britain caught in a tricky crisis of inflation, unemployment and external deficit, the pound continues to fall. Yesterday it dropped almost to the once-unthinkable level of $1.70; and the Government seems unable to check its continuing slide. But Chancellor Denis Healey says he will not change the Government's basic economic program merely to impress the foreign exchange market.

The Labor Government is facing a tough dilemma. If it were to slash public expenditures, in breach of its understanding with its trade-union supporters, it might drive the unions into revolt and wreck hope of gaining their adherence to a tight incomes policy that limits wages in the coming year to an increase of only 4½ percent. But if the incomes policy were shattered, inflation, still running at an annual rate of about 14 percent, could soar again—and further undermine the pound.

British Government leaders keep insisting that the pound is now undervalued—but here the market's judgment may deserve more credence. The British rate of inflation, double that of the European average and three times as high as that of the United States, West Germany and Switzerland, spells continuous erosion in the value of the pound. Though selling of pounds has been relatively light thus far, the market has been extremely thin on the buying side. And the danger always exists that, if the Government does not act strongly enough, a far more massive selling of sterling balances held overseas could develop.

. . . and Efforts to Halt It

The Labor Government must do more than hold to policies that have not yet worked and show little prospect of working adequately for months to come. It must persuade the unions, and the rest of the country, that further cuts in Government spending are essential to stop the inflation sooner. Mr. Healey would obviously prefer to wait until the autumn budget review to trim outlays in a careful and orderly way, but the developing crisis may not permit this. The spending plans of local government authorities, now running over one billion dollars above agreed estimates, need to be reined back promptly.

A tighter monetary policy appears indicated. Two weeks ago the Bank of England raised the bank rate—the equivalent of the Federal Reserve's discount rate—by a full percentage point to 11½ percent, the second rise in a month. But this had little effect in stemming the flight from the pound. Nor could it be expected to, with the rate of inflation higher than the bank rate, and the real cost of borrowing negative. Higher interest rates would attract capital to Britain and help ease the external threat.

A tougher anti-inflation program is not incompatible with economic growth for Britain. With the world economy recovering, the lower prices for British exports resulting from the cheaper pound increase the chance for an export-led British expansion.

Both daring and skill are now required of the Labor Government. Its own survival is at stake, and, more than that, the ability of Britain to reverse the economic disaster into which it has been sliding.

A King for Democracy

King Juan Carlos I has used the occasion of his visit to the United States to make the most positive commitment of his six-month reign to the restoration of "authentic liberty" and democratic government in Spain. The 38-year-old monarch's dramatic avowal, in his address delivered to a joint session of Congress, undoubtedly helped undercut whatever opposition had existed in the Senate to approval of a five-year treaty of military and economic cooperation between Spain and the United States.

His commitment to a democratic Spain was as complete as any liberal could wish. Not only did he pledge to work for a structure in which every Spaniard would have "full scope for political participation without discrimination of any kind" but he promised that the monarchy would insure "the orderly access to power of distinct political alternatives"—in short, the peaceful transfer of power after free elections.

While heartening to Spain's democratic forces, the King's remarks are certain to provoke bitter criticism from die-hard supporters of the late Generalissimo Franco and possibly—because they were made not at home but in the American capital—from elements in his armed services sensitive to charges that under the new treaty they will enter a kind of colonial relationship with their American counterparts. The King had obviously weighed the political risks and decided to accept them.

His Washington comportment in fact represents an extension, outside Spain and in public, of the King's recent private behavior at home. He has at last made clear his determination to break with the Franco era; he has indicated deep dissatisfaction with the slow pace of reform projected by Prime Minister Carlos Arias Navarro, a Franco holdover, and has boldly called in for consultation the leaders of political parties that are still officially illegal under Franco statutes.

There have been frequent indications of the King's democratic sentiments. What was in doubt in the period after General Franco's death last October was his willingness to stand up to the Francoists and to risk alienation of more conservative elements in the armed forces in order to push desperately needed reforms. His Washington stance indicates his readiness to assume in full the role assigned to him by Foreign Minister José María de Areilza as the "motor of change" that will bring democracy to Spain.

It is still far from clear that the King together with the forces of democracy can prevail over the hard core of Francoists, determined to perpetuate the Caudillo's archaic authoritarianism. The arrest yesterday of the liberal journalist, Rafael Calvo Serrer, on his return to Madrid from five years of exile, is a timely reminder of how difficult the struggle will be to achieve the ideals Juan Carlos proclaimed in Washington.

But the King is surely right in his basic assumptions: Spain's political and economic future hinges on its success in gaining admission to the European Community, and this in turn requires steady evolution toward parliamentary democracy. It is in the best interests of the United States to help Spain in every possible way toward that goal.

U.N. Agencies: To Stop the Manipulators

To the Editor:

If a judge decided to impose punishment on a defendant after the jury had found the defendant not guilty, imagine the resulting outcry.

It is just such a protest that must be raised concerning the continuing trend in the specialized agencies of the U.N. The formula is simple: Accuse Israel of some violation and then send in selected experts to investigate. When the experts turn in a report saying the charges are unfounded, reject the report and proceed to censure Israel anyway.

The practice began in November 1974 when UNESCO voted to exclude Israel from any of its regional groupings—in effect expelling Israel from the agency. The pretext was a resolution censuring Israel for altering the historical character of Jerusalem and endangering religious monuments. A report submitted by a UNESCO-commissioned archeologist stating that the character of the city was being preserved was suppressed.

The latest incident occurred recently in Geneva at the World Health Organization. A report by the W.H.O.-appointed panel citing "slow but steady improvement" in the health conditions in territories occupied by Israel since 1967 was rejected. The report had been submitted by doctors from three countries, two of which, Indonesia and Senegal, have no diplomatic relations with Israel. But W.H.O. now threatens to expel Israel if a new team of experts isn't allowed to come in again. Can there be any doubt that, regardless of facts, the next team will be charged with finding Israel guilty of undermining health standards?

With this record, it is heartening therefore, as noted in The Times of May 22, that some third-world members who condemned Israel at last year's W.H.O. Assembly did not do so this year, and that fourteen Western countries supported the position of the U.S. and Israel. A hopeful sign that resistance to any political manipulation of the specialized agencies is taking root.

This resistance must grow. We call upon our colleagues everywhere to encourage all actions designed to end politicization of the U.N. and its bodies. In doing so we hope to arrest the U.N.'s steady decline into the dustbin of history in which the League of Nations reposes. [Editorial May 24.]

Hot-Lunch Testimony From P.S. 88

News articles on May 19 and 20 about school food service prompted the following (excerpted) letters from fourth-grade students of Miss Susan Mandel at Public School 88 in Ridgewood, Queens:

S. Harrow

I think that hot lunch is good. But just some certain things. The pizza is good. The hot dogs are very nice but a little salty. The potatoes are sour and the hamburgers are sickening.
JOSEPHINE SCARPULLA

I had hot lunch for a week. I would not like to have it again. It gave me a stomach ache. MICHAEL TORRE

I don't eat in school because it's so noisy. Also, some kids throw food around . . . When the school aides and the principal want us to be quiet, they have to blow their whistles about thirty times . . . and after a while the whistle noise gets on my nerves.
KAREN WEINGARTNER

I've been eating [hot lunch] for four years now. I can't stand the stuff, but I eat it because my mother won't let me eat cold lunch.
MICHELLE TURNER

I like school lunch even though it doesn't contain a lot of protein and vitamins. . . . It is kind of nice to smell the delicious aroma of food. We know sometimes right away what we're having. JACKIE GARVEY

I had hot lunch for a month and then quit. I think the lunch is not good at all. Just by looking at it you get sick. GUNTER MUELLER

I think that the school lunch is very good. The fish stinks. DAN MACARI

WOLFGANG RUBIG

My opinion is that the lunch is good; no, it's not good, it's excellent, terrific and delicious. It smells so good, you can tell what it is all the way down to the second floor. . . . Everything in hot lunch passes my standards.
BILLY LARSEN

I am a fussy person, and I wouldn't eat it. So why should my mother pay for it? LAURA CORDIER

Chicago '69: How 2 Black Panthers Died

To the Editor:

Some people never stop trying to rewrite history and ignore truth. Edward V. Hanrahan's May 26 letter to the editor is a sad example. He seeks to justify his role as State's Attorney in Chicago on Dec. 4, 1969, when police assigned to his office smashed into the Illinois Black Panther Party headquarters, killing Fred Hampton and Mark Clark.

He first notes that a Federal grand jury returned no indictments and that the opposing ballistics expert could not "tell what shots fired by Black Panthers may have exited through front and back doors and windows . . . without leaving shell marks." Of course, no expert could say a bullet was not fired through an open space where no mark could be left.

Inside, where police shot occupants, the walls looked liked Swiss cheese. The F.B.I. ballistics evidence reported by the Federal grand jury found that police fired between 82 and 99 shots, while only one shot was fired from a weapon seized by police. It injured no one. Three young people were shot in cold blood in a center bedroom with no outside window or door through which a bullet could vanish. The Federal grand jury report was a whitewash. Even Senator John McClellan commented, "I doubt the legality of that report."

Incredibly, Mr. Hanrahan justifies the raid by saying it "was made pursuant to a court order." But it was illegally executed at 4:45 A.M. by fourteen heavily armed police (a Thompson submachine gun, five shotguns, a carbine, 19 or 20 .38 caliber and one .357 pistols), who used no speaker system or lights, brought no gas or other nonlethal control equipment and gave no reasonable warning before raking the premises with gunfire.

Mr. Hanrahan further cites admissions wrongfully obtained from survivors, improbable on their face and contrary to all physical evidence. He should have been indicted for planning the raid itself and violating the survivors' rights. This is the same man who in the wake of the murder and mayhem said his officers "exercised good judgment, considerable restraint and professional discipline" in reacting to "the extreme viciousness of the Black Panther Party" and then gave an "exclusive" account of the police action to CBS-TV, misinforming and prejudicing the public.

In its 1973 report, "Search and Destroy," the Commission of Inquiry found that "there is probable cause to believe that Fred Hampton was murdered" and "those officials responsible for planning the police action and some who participated acted with wanton disregard of human life and the legal rights of American citizens." Mr. Hanrahan has said nothing to change that conclusion.

'Draft the B-1'

To the Editor:

The Times has recently commented editorially about the cost of the Department of Defense. One editorial dealt with personnel costs and seemed to advocate a return to the draft; the most recent concerned the $80 million (each!) B-1 bomber.

It appears that since World War II the cost of a man in uniform has increased by a factor of about five, but the cost of a combat airplane has gone up by at least a factor of 100.

The cost-effective solution is so simple that the Pentagon budget experts should have discovered it: Draft the B-1 bomber! ALLAN G. LEBARON

...lif.—If socialism is ...arx did, as "owner- ... of production by United States has ...ialist country. The ... the employees of ...cially of American ... more than enough ...trol: in excess of ...apital of all large- ... business—whether ...ilers, banks or in- ... p 500 corporations, ...dy own a majority ... pension funds con- ...ings in the largest ... traded companies. ...en years, by 1986, ... funds will own a ... truly "small" busi- ...own as much as ...g ones. Only farm- ... this country the ... the family farmer ... of production any- ...fted ownership to ...nvestors"—that is, ... ents out of every ...venue of business ...ds—either to those ...own employees or ...al investors," the ... other companies' ...vernment share is ...it much more than 35 cents (though, of course, Federal, state and city governments take another bite through the personal income tax). The shareholders other than pension funds, the people who we still call the "owners," get less than a quarter. And long before 1985, the pension-fund share in corporate revenues before taxes will have passed 50 percent and will still be rising.

Pension-fund socialism started a little more than 25 years ago. The General Motors pension fund, established in October 1950, was the first of the new "institutional investors" and set the pattern. Pension-fund investments began to build up rapidly in the early 1960's and have been growing fast ever since.

The United States has actually brought under worker ownership a larger share of its productive resources than such stalwart Soviet satellites as Poland or Hungary have socialized. But American pension-fund socialism has "socialized" the means of production without "nationalizing" them. Instead of the Government, the agent of socialism is an autonomous nonprofit "trustee," the employee's pension fund.

Almost no one has yet thought much about the consequences, yet they are startling. The distribution of wealth, for instance, has changed greatly. Pension-fund claims are not "property." They can neither be sold nor bought, can neither be mortgaged nor bequeathed. But they are clearly "wealth." Indeed, for the older family —the family with a breadwinner more than 50 years of age—the pension-fund claim is a more valuable asset than the automobile or even the single-family house. And the wealth represented by pension-fund claims is distributed much more equally than any other item of wealth. If pension-fund claims were counted as "personal wealth," which indeed they are, we would at once see that the employed middle class, rather than the "superrich," "own America."

The most important consequences of pension-fund socialism are still ahead. Managements have yet to think through how they need to relate to the new owners, the beneficiaries of the pension funds, and how they could and should bring this new "ownership interest" into company structure and corporate policy. The pension funds equally will have to think through what rights and obligations they have acquired as the representatives of these new ownership interests. Union leaders will find increasingly that their own members are the "wicked capitalists." And the employees, above all, will increasingly find themselves related to the employer, both as "wage slaves" and as "owners," both with an interest in today's wage income, and an interest in the profits that finance tomorrow's pensions. But the most important fact about America's accomplished pension-fund socialism are not new problems, new relationships and new opportunities. It is that a change of this magnitude has crept up on us without anyone seeing it or noticing it. Pension-fund socialism is a major "revolution" in economic and social structure, yet one that has been totally nonviolent, totally voluntary, and almost totally unseen.

Reform by Scandal

By James Reston

WASHINGTON, June 3—It would be too much to say that money, booze and sex dominate the politics of this city, but you can hardly explain recent history around here without taking them into account.

But for the tragedy at Chappaquiddick, with its Friday night high-jinks, there is little doubt that Senator Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts would now be the leading candidate for both the Democratic nomination and the Presidency.

For years, the House of Representatives had been bridling under the power of the Ways and Means Committee and its effective but authoritarian chairman, Wilbur Mills; but it took his splashy liaison with Fanne Foxe, otherwise known as the Argentine Firecracker, to bring his amorous ways and means to the rescue of the House.

The latest example of reform by scandal is the case of Wayne Hays, Democrat of Ohio. He has been the House bully for years. No amount of personal arrogance, nepotism, or misuse of power had been able to bring him down, but finally he is on his way out for running a personal night-shift with public funds.

The charge against him, it should be noted, is not that he misused Elizabeth Ray but that he misused the Congressional treasury by arranging to pay her $14,000 a year for personal services. Considering the work she had to do and the company she had to keep, it might be argued that she was underpaid.

Wilbur Mills was a sick man who earned the compassion of the House, but he took his lumps and disappeared. In contrast, Wayne Hays' resignation from the chairmanship of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee was a masterpiece of hypocrisy. He was merely stepping aside temporarily, he suggested, because the political checks he would have to write might be used as a "campaign issue" against his fellow Democrats. In his book, nothing is bad except "bad politics."

Washington is paying a high price for reform these days, but maybe it's worth it. The misuse of Presidential power was obvious for years during the Vietnam War, but it took the spectacular scandals of Watergate to reform campaign financing and bring the White House, the C.I.A., the F.B.I. and the other intelligence agencies under some kind of control.

In the process, the Congress howled against the corruptions of the executive branch. It put the impeachment processes of the Constitution into action against Richard Nixon, and with the aid of the courts, finally brought him down. Now it will be interesting to see whether the leaders of the House and Senate will get their own houses in order.

For while it would be a libel on the Congress to suggest that Wayne Hays is typical of anything but his own arrogant bawdiness, the fact is that the Congressional staffs are not up to the standards imposed by the Congress itself on the executive civil service. And the standards of personal conduct on the Hill fall considerably below anything Congressional committees would tolerate from, say, members of the President's Cabinet.

Thus, we have heard very little about the Hays case from Speaker Carl Albert, the presiding Democrat in the House, which is not surprising, since he is not widely admired here as a model of temperance or Congressional probity. The problem of disciplining Mr. Hays was left to Tip O'Neill, the majority leader, and though younger members of the House and other House leaders urged him to insist that Hays resign all of his committee chairmanships pending resolution of the case, Mr. O'Neill gave him the easy way out.

This is not likely, however, to be the end of the problem. Whatever happens in the Presidential election, the leadership on the Hill will be quite different next January. Mike Mansfield and Hugh Scott, the majority and minority leaders of the Senate, will not be back next year, and their replacements have not yet been chosen.

Speaker Albert will either resign or, if he chooses to run again, will almost certainly be challenged for his present job. This was coming on before the Hays affair, and there is now a movement afoot to defend the integrity of the Congress.

In his statement, Mr. Hays said: "I have become aware of the concern on the part of a number of Democrats that my chairmanship of the Democratic House Campaign Committee places an unnecessary and unwarranted burden on my fellow Democratic candidates."

This is the understatement of the year. It is not his chairmanship that is at issue but his conduct that has finally awakened the so-called Ethics Committee from its prolonged snooze. If unpopularity were a cause for dismissal, Mr. Hays would have been sent packing long ago; but now the House has a better case, and it might just take it. But don't bet more than you'd like to lose.

Rails on the Freeways

IN THE NATION

If such a pro- ...aken and proves ...y of automobiles, ...derable effect on ...lon plans else- ... ...lo not believe the ... the right kind of answer in any case. Its most significant feature is that it would be built primarily above ground, along existing rights of way on freeways, canal and river banks, abandoned rail lines and some of the old corridors of the defunct Pacific Electric trolley system that provided fondly remembered service here until the mid-50's. The only major subway segment would be a 13.5-mile route under Wilshire Boulevard, linking downtown Los Angeles and the Century City area.

Use of freeways for rapid transit is contrary to most urban planning here and elsewhere. Freeways were built to bypass high density areas; ideally, most planners believe, a rapid transit system should link such areas—as the Wilshire Boulevard subway would. But the Sunset Coast Line scheme has the political virtues of avoiding costly and controversial rights-of-way acquisition, and of serving more than half the 78 municipalities in the area.

Los Angeles County Supervisor Baxter Ward, a voluble former television commentator and the principal architect of the Sunset Coast Line proposal, is sure that passengers will flock to his brainchild if it is built. Mayor Tom Bradley supports the plan, but the Los Angeles City Council is opposed. The L.A. Times has raised serious questions about it and political buffs here generally believe the voters will reject the proposal, not least because approval would require a one-cent increase in the state sales tax for pay-as-you-go construction over 30 years, and to pay some operating costs.

Recently, Mr. Ward gained an important convert, the planning director for Los Angeles, Calvin S. Hamilton, whose doubts were overcome by his belief in an "absolute necessity" to provide an alternative to the automobile in this area. His reason is the drastic increase in the price of gasoline that he expects in coming years; another is the possibility that some day there'll be no gas, or very little, available at any price.

Although no Sunset Coast Line trains would operate before 1984, another impetus toward developing rapid transit here may be that, unless Congress acts to prevent it, the Environmental Protection Agency probably will have to prohibit sales of gasoline in the metropolitan Los Angeles area after May 31, 1977. Existing E.P.A. regulations, which have been sustained in the courts, will mandate this drastic action unless the area can find some means of meeting the national ambient air quality standards by that date.

Contrary to popular belief, however, rapid transit here might not do much to eliminate the famous Los Angeles smog. If the line carried a million riders a day, as estimated, studies reported by The Times show that auto trips would be reduced only enough to cut air pollution by a few percentage points. As E.P.A. regulations make autos "cleaner," reducing auto usage will have even less effect on air pollution.

Opponents also argue that a rapid transit system would not produce large overall energy savings. Enormous energy expenditures would be required in construction, and operations on the line when it is completed would take about 270 megawatts of power, a quarter of the capacity of a large coal-fired or nuclear generator. Studies suggest, moreover, that transit riders tend to be drawn mostly from people who would otherwise ride buses or in carpools, rather than from private auto drivers.

But a rapid transit system could be operated without significant petroleum consumption, if the electricity were generated by other means, and that may be the best argument for the Sunset Coast Line, with all its faults. If for lack of oil this area someday had to give up its love affair with the automobile, there would be rails on the freeways to keep people moving.

We reject the use of the word "constantly" when what is meant is "continually." I am happy to have a "constant" wife; a "continual" one is something else.

We deplore the use of the word "presently" when what is meant is "currently." The two words can mean the same thing, but "presently" can also mean "when I am damned good and ready," whereas "currently" always means now.

To wind up this exercise in exorcism, we would like to zero in on our pet hate in the buzzword category. The use of the word "viable," a technical term meaning capable of living, in a phrase such as "a viable option for a business" is pretentious at best.

In the editing business, as in many others, it is essential to retain a sense of humor, and we try to. In one of the old Marx Brothers' movies, Groucho's secretary came into his office and said, "Messrs. Smith and Jones have been waiting in the outer office for over an hour and they are waxing wroth." Groucho's reply was something like, "Send Roth in and tell the other two bums to wait."

We may wax wroth from time to time, but we hope (not hopefully) that our waxing products a patina on the articles we edit.

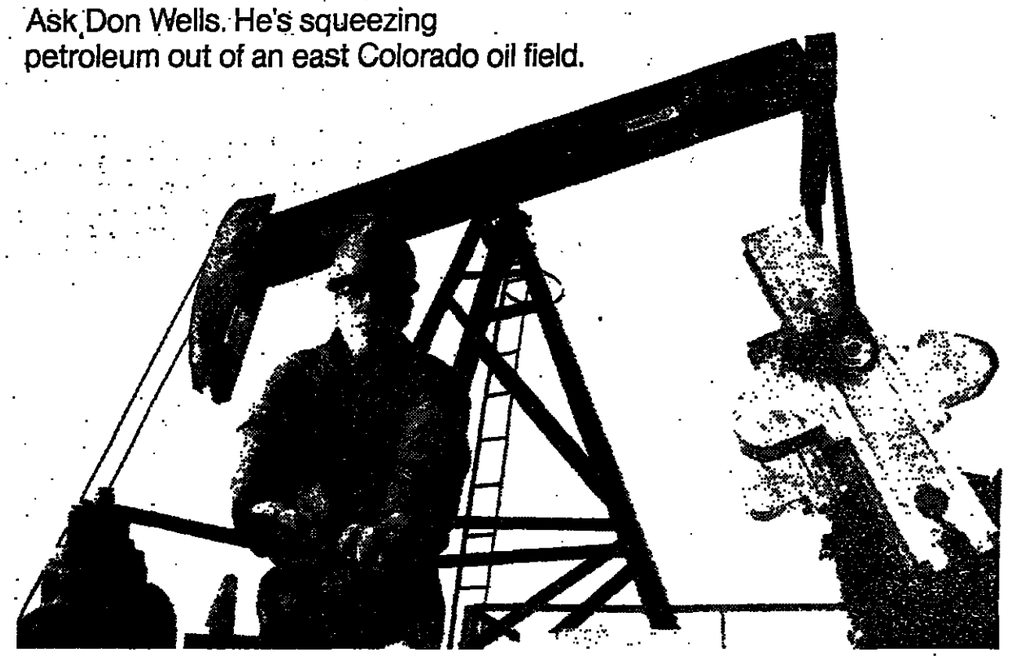
Profits Are For People...

Ask Don Wells. He's squeezing petroleum out of an east Colorado oil field.



Since 1971, we've spent nearly $440 million for exploration and production of oil and natural gas in the U.S. and overseas. To meet our country's growing need for energy, we've expanded our domestic operations, including those in offshore Texas and Louisiana. In partnership with other companies, we've found big oil fields in the North Sea and important gas and oil deposits in Indonesia. And we're exploring in the Mediterranean, the Middle East, Western Europe and Canada.

Where do we get the money it takes to find and develop these sources of energy?

Like all companies, we rely on profits. Profits provide part of the expansion capital needed to start up new operations, modernize plants, control pollution and expand old businesses. Profits also enable us to borrow the rest of the capital we need. From 1971 to 1975, profits provided $276 million toward our investment in these job-creating activities. We raised many millions more through security offerings to individuals, institutions, pension funds and others who were attracted by our record of profitability and their faith in our future.

That's where profits go—into creative capital investment, to generate jobs, to keep our economy going and growing. Energy producers, like Don Wells know the real meaning of profits—for everyone.

HOW TO SIGN UP FOR FREE CHECKING IF YOU'RE A CITIBANK CUSTOMER.

If you have the kind of checking where you pay for every check. Simply go to your nearest Citibank branch and ask for free checking. Then we can help you choose where to keep your $500 average balance. In your savings or your checking account. If you don't have a Citibank savings account, you may want to open one.

If you have the kind of checking where your balance determines your charge. Because you're keeping an average minimum balance in your checking account, you're not paying for every check. You can now keep that average balance in a savings account and still get free checking. So, if you don't have a savings account at Citibank, you may want to open one.

If you have a Citibank Combo Plan. You don't do anything. Your monthly checking fee will be eliminated as of the statement you receive in June.

If you only have a Citibank savings account. And, if your balance averages $500, then you have an excellent reason to switch your checking to Citibank and get free checking.

HOW TO GET FREE CHECKING IF YOU'RE A CUSTOMER OF ANOTHER BANK.

Chances are, you're not getting all this at your present bank, so you're probably wondering how you can get our free checking. Simply stop in at the Citibank branch nearest you and ask for free checking. We'll take care of the rest. It's that easy.

Driscoll said, it was with the idea of putting "some kind of retail presence in." He said that what had happened in so many areas of the city, when office buildings were erected, was that blocks of small retail and neighborhood stores vanished.

"We had a commitment to put retail back into that site," he said. So he and a group of Citicorp executives traveled about the country looking at shopping malls, seeking ideas. Two — the Crown Center in Kansas City, and another in the Hartford Civic Center—attracted them. Both had been designed and planned by Mr. Buckley's concern, Halcyon Ltd.

Other Elements Cited

"They were clean, crisp, something we could identify our company with," Mr. Driscoll said.

Mr. Buckley was hired to come up with proposals for Citicorp's 1.3-million-square-foot plaza beneath its new building, for the atrium, area that would abut on the new St. Peter's Church that is part of the block development.

Mr. Buckley, perceiving, he said, the "exuberance of the architecture of the new building, the fact that you have a church with a ministry to the jazz profession, with programs in the performing arts," was inspired to come up with plans.

An international hand-made-goods boutique was ruled out, as was a fashion complex, a mall devoted totally to leisure, and a mall in the conventional sense. Finally, Mr. Buckley suggested food as "the most easily assimilated window on the world" and a total food concept as "something that has never before been done in New York," and Citicorp bought it.

"We told him to go ahead, just make it the best," Mr. Driscoll said.

Mr. Lang was brought in as food consultant and to help plan the ambiance. D. I. Design, a Toronto concern, was made responsible for control of the design, and Robert C. Little of Haddam, Conn. was made responsible for leases and the tenant mix.

And so, perhaps by late fall, the three-story Market will open with Swiss fondue, raw seafood from Japan, an Italian sausage shop, an Argentine grill, a shop selling Russian caviar with crystal cups and ivory spoons to serve it with, perhaps a Mainland Chinese restaurant, a natural food bar with such attractions as a made-without-chemicals red wine from Aix en Provence, shops from other countries, even tacos and hamburgers and salads. And flowers for centerpieces.

Limnologist Uses Stream To Study Water Life

By BAYARD WEBSTER
Special to The New York Times

WEST MARLBORO TOWNSHIP, Pa. — Propping herself against the trunk of her car, the stocky, dark-haired woman pulled on a pair of well-worn hip boots, grabbed a long-handled dip net and walked briskly toward a nearby creek, a clutch of 14 graduate students, all similarly booted, in her wake.

They were setting out to examine the aquatic life in the stream, a carefully monitored living laboratory that meanders through the Stroud Water Research Center here, believed to be the world's most comprehensive facility for the study of fresh water streams and ponds.

The woman at the head of the group was 68-year-old Ruth Patrick, one of the country's leading limnologists

Scientists at Work

This is another in a series of articles appearing from time to time describing the creative process of scientific research.

—those scientists who spend a good part of their lives studying lakes and streams.

Dr. Patrick's latest excursion into the clear Chester County stream was one of the several thousands of times she has pulled on her boots and gone wading in the name of science. "I don't believe in armchair investigation," she said as a chill wind ruffled the surface of the creek.

The results of her expeditions here and in many parts of the world have brought her renown as one of the world's experts on the microscopic plants known as diatoms. These one-celled organisms, whose species number in the thousands, make up the majority of the algae family. They are found in both fresh and salt water and in moist places in every sector of the earth.

Unlike other algal forms, they have hard, shiny outer shells of silica and, by the process of photosynthesis, produce a kind of oil instead of the usual cellulose products—starches, sugars and carbohydrates — that most plants manufacture.

Pollution Indicators

Dr. Patrick has learned to use diatoms (pronounced DYE-ah-toms) as water pollution indicators. She devised a system that relates the types and numbers of diatoms present in a stream or lake to the type and extent of pollution, enabling her quickly to identify contamination problems. This method is now used in many parts of the world to help determine water quality.

Although she was not going to make her students go through the methodology of her pollution identification system, she was taking them on one of their first field trips, gathering samples of animal and plant life, including diatoms, and then examining and classifying them under the microscopes in the laboratory.

The scientist-teacher was on the banks of her home stream now, that belonged to the limnology department, which she founded, of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, of which she is chairman. She was looking for new discoveries and at the same time hoping to transfer some of her knowledge to her students—future biologists and limnologists from the University of Pennsylvania, where she is professor of biology.

As she led the way, she and her students scooped up samples of insects, algae, moss and mud from the stream bed and placed them on screens or fine-mesh sieves. Several of the group watched through a hand lens as a minuscule black fly emerged from its pupal casing and unsteadily began to walk.

Pouring samples of stream water into small plastic bags,

The odd shapes of diatoms, tiny microscopic algae, have fascinated scientists for years. These, from top, were gathered in a New Jersey marsh, New York Harbor and in Great Britain. The actual size of a diatom is less than one one-hundredth of an inch.

Egypt yesterday condemned Syria's military intervention in Lebanon and called for a meeting of Arab foreign ministers to put an end to it. Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy said that Egypt supported the Palestine Liberation Organization's demand for Arab action to end the civil war between Moslems and Christians. [Page A1, Column 8.]

Carrying out the Ford Administration's new policy of helping to bring an end to white minority rule in Rhodesia, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will meet in Europe this month with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa. The meeting is expected to take place in the week of June 20, when Mr. Kissinger plans to be in Paris and London. [A1:7.]

Art experts who had worked for a year and a half in an appraisal put a value of $260 million on Pablo Picasso's collection of his own works, including 1,185 paintings. The figure was disclosed in Paris in a court hearing on a petition by Picasso's 24-year-old granddaughter, Marina, one of his six heirs, for a renegotiation of an agreement on dividing the artist's estate. With real estate and Picasso's bank account, the estate's total value may be $1.01 billion. [A1:7-8.]

National

Jimmy Carter said the Democratic Party should not adopt a "wish box or Christmas tree" platform filled with excessively costly and unrealistic promises. He said at a news conference in Cleveland that the nature of the party platform was of "great concern to me." The platform, he said, represented "the word of the Democratic Party" and should be written with the same "sense of responsibility as a budget," and that "I want to be sure people are not misled by promises that can't be kept." [A1:5-6.]

Senator Hubert H. Humphrey said that he would probably begin an active pursuit of the Democratic Presidential nomination if Jimmy Carter does badly in next Tuesday's three primaries. He said he would end his noncandidacy only if he was convinced that Mr. Carter had fewer than 1,200 to 1,300 delegates of the 1,505 needed for nomination "really solidly nailed down." [A1:4.]

Attempting to placate his angry colleagues in the House, Representative Wayne L. Hays agreed to give up temporarily one of his four committee chairmanships, but only stirred new demands that he step down from his other posts as well. [A1:3.]

Metropolitan

A ruling by the State Court of Appeals that was expected to start a major political and legal controversy, limited the jurisdiction of the special state prosecutor, Maurice H. Nadjari, "strictly to the criminal justice process or system." Mr. Nadjari has consistently interpreted his jurisdiction to extend beyond the criminal justice system to conduct relating in any way to the enforcement of law. The 4-to-3 decision was made in a review of a case prosecuted by Mr. Nadjari involving a Queens lawyer who was charged with attempting to influence the testimony in a civil trial of a police officer who had witnessed an automobile accident. The court said the case should be tried by the Queens District Attorney, not by Mr. Nadjari, who, it said "was not authorized to investigate and prosecute acts relating to a purely civil action." [A1:1-2.]

An investigation of the city's direct leasing of day-care centers is being made by District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau to determine if builders and city employees conspired to levy excessive charges in the controversial child-care program. Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin is making a similar investigation. More than a million gallons of sludge flowed to dozens of nearby beaches when two sewage storage tanks on a small island off Long Island's south shore near Long Beach exploded. One of the two boys who had been fishing was rescued from the sludge, critically injured, but his companion was missing. The Nassau County Health Department closed 63 beaches, and innoculated policemen, Coast Guardsmen and public employees working in the explosion area against tetanus, typhoid and hepatitis. [A1:1.]

Joanne Kim Klein, the former wife of a New York clothing manufacturer, and her maid were found shot to death in Mrs. Klein's home on Perkins Road in Greenwich, Conn. Mrs. Klein, who was 30 years old, had been a model and had been in the advertising and marketing business and was known professionally as Kim Bryan. The police broke into the house after no one had picked up Mrs. Klein's son at a nursery school. [A1:1-2.]

Quotation of the Day

"Peoples not familiar with our ways have thought it a trifle paradoxical for the British to be joining in the celebration of the Bicentenary of what was, after all, the loss of the American colonies. They overlook our traditions of compromise. Strike of Hospitals Averted as 2 Sides Agree on a Panel

The threat of a municipal hospital strike next Monday was averted late yesterday when city and union officials agreed to submit the dispute to a three-man panel that would make nonbinding recommendations for a settlement.

The strike threat, by the 18,000-member Local 420 of District Council 37, was touched off by the insistence of the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation to carry out the laying off of 3,200 workers.

The three-man panel agreed on by both sides is to be headed by former State Senator Basil A. Paterson. The other members are Walter Eisenberg, who is dean of graduate studies at Hunter College, and Martin Horwitz, president and chief executive officer of UV Industries, a concern involved in mining, oil and gas, and manufacturing of electrical equipment.

The panel is to make its recommendations by next Friday.

The agreement was announced at Gracie Mansion after intensive negotiations involving the Mayor and top city officials and Victor Gotbaum, executive director of District Council 37.

The agreement provides that while the panel is considering its recommendations the union will not strike and the Hospital Corporation agrees not to lay off employees associated with Gouverneur Hospital, Sydenham Hospital or the Belvis Neighborhood Family Health Care Center.

The Hospitals Corporation had scheduled to close Sydenham and Belvis and cut back services sharply in Gouverneur as an economy move in the city's fiscal crisis.

Mr. Gotbaum emerged smiling from the Gracie Mansion meeting and expressed confidence "that this eminent panel will rule in our favor and stop the layoffs."

Carey Gets a Plan to End Co-op City Tenant Strike

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, June 3—Governor Carey has received a formal recommendation—Endorsed by the tenant leader at Co-op City—to end the tenant strike there by temporarily permitting residents to establish their own rent levels if they promise not to increase the deficit in what they owe the state.

But the Governor's office is handling the compromise proposal—submitted only a few days ago by Mario M. Cuomo, the Secretary of State—as if it were a time bomb that could shatter Mr. Carey's delicate plans to rescue the State Housing Finance Agency.

The year long strike by residents at the huge Bronx cooperative housing project has become one of the most vexing problems for the Carey administration, which has watched in dismay as each month has gone by without a settlement.

Top aides to the Governor have expressed the fear that, even though the project's problems are not strictly related to the state's other fiscal woes, the continuing absence of a solution at Co-op City is jeopardizing their efforts to restore solvency to the Housing Finance Agency and the other state construction agencies that have financed hundreds of projects, of which Co-op City's is the biggest.

Residents of Co-Op City began withholding their carrying charges a year ago when the state housing agency raised them from $43 to $53 a room to cover rising costs in fuel, maintenance and other items. In the meantime, the residents made some payments to utilities and employees to keep their 15,000-family community going.

Mr. Carey directed Mr. Cuomo to try to effect a compromise, which Mr. Cuomo was in the midst of pursuing when a court ruling upheld the right of the state to foreclose its $436 million mortgage on the project.

The Governor's office said today that Mr. Carey was still studying the matter. Mr. Carey is known to be reluctant to embrace any solution calling for less than full payments by tenants at a time when his advisers are negotiating on other matters with two groups demanding full restitution.

Those groups are the Republican majority in the State Senate and Federal officials in the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development, who have agreed to participate in the complicated rescue of the state housing agency.

The outline of Mr. Cuomo's compromise solution, as reported by those familiar with it, is roughly as follows:

The residents would elect their own tenants' group, which would take over the management of Co-op City, now being run by the state. Tenants would set their own carrying charges, guaranteeing that the amount they owe the state now would not grow.

How much they actually owe the state is a matter of some dispute. The state says it is roughly $27 million, but the tenants will not commit themselves to a figure. In any case, under the compromise, the tenants would make sure that—for six months, at least—the $2.2 million monthly state charge for interest and principal of the Co-op City mortgage would, in effect, be met.

It would be met because residents would agree to turn over equivalent sums in money owed the state, but withheld for the last year.

"I think it's a rational proposal," said Charles Rosen, head of the strike. "It takes a sober view of the situation and attempts to create a setting for a solution. It is not a solution, but it takes the problem out of confrontation and permits us to find ways of resolving it on a permanent basis."

Lee I. Goodwin, the State Housing Commissioner, said she would oppose any compromise that does not raise carrying charges to a level that assures meeting the mortgage costs. Mrs. Goodwin is further reported to have told others she would find such a resolution "untenable," prompting fears in Mr. Carey's office that she would resign and thereby jeopardize the state's effort to win Federal participation in the rescue of the state housing agency.

Man Who Saved Child On Tracks Gets Medal

The Carnegie Medal for for heroism and $1,000 in cash from the Cernegie Fund were presented yesterday to a Manhattan man who leaped to the tracks to save a 4-year-old girl last year.

The award was made to Everett Sanderson of 245 West 51st Street, who rescued the girl, Michelle de Jesus, on Jan. 16, 1975, after she toppled to the tracks at the Lexington Avenue lines' 86th Street station at atrain was approaching.

The award was made by David L. Yunich., chairman of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority.

Mr. Sanderson, a student at the New York Institute of Dietetics, and the man who helped him in the rescue, Miguel Maisonet, now an M.T.A. employee, had already received Transit Authority medallions and certificates of honor, in addition to free passes on subways and buses—Mr. Sanderson's for life and Mr. Maisonet's for five years.

New York University's commencement exercises being held yesterday in Washington Square Park for first time since university's founding in 1831

8,000 Get Degrees At N.Y.U. Ceremony

New York University celebrated the end of the academic year yesterday with a $2.7 million reduction in its deficit and its first outdoor commencement in Washington Square Park since the university was founded in 1831.

The university's new president, John C. Sawhill, presided over exercises for some 8,000 graduates seated around the fountain in the historic park that is in the heart of the university's Greenwich Village campus.

Before the ceremonies, Mr. Sawhill disclosed in an interview that the academic year's expected deficit of $8.2 million had been trimmed to $5.5 million.

Next year's deficit, he projected, will be cut from the $9.3 million that was originally expected to $2.8 million. And by the end of the 1977-78 academic year, he predicted, the university's austerity drive, which was begun in 1972, will produce a balanced budget.

"Frankly, I've been pleased with the cooperation that I've gotten from the university community toward solving the problems," the 39-year-old Mr. Sawhill said.

Several hours later he stood beneath a canopied stage in a grove of trees in the park and welcomed the graduates of 13 schools and colleges and their guests to the university's 144th commencement.

The previous graduations were held at N.Y.U.'s former University Heights campus in the Bronx or at Madison Square Garden. But because of preparations at the Garden for July's Democratic National Convention, the university had to look elsewhere, and Mr. Sawhill chose the park.

Cleaning the park, setting up the stage, sound system and chairs, and other problems that had always discouraged commencement planners from using the park were finished after four days of work. Bells rang in neighborhood churches as the colorful academic procession moved into the park, beneath the shadows of the arch.

The main speaker, former Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger, told the graduates that their main challenge—and that of all Americans—was to help revitalize faith in the country's values and institutions, thus reducing to "more manageable proportions" the nation's post-Watergate problems.

Mr. Schlesinger said that "this . . . era that has rejected the concept of sin" has eroded public confidence in Presidential leadership, which is vital to the conduct of foreign affairs.

The United States, he said, is now "the sole potential counterweight to growing Soviet power." He added that to ignore America's military and diplomatic responsibility to nations overseas would lead to a "neurotic isolation in which the United States . . . would be forced gradually to surrender many of its amenities and freedoms."

Robber Takes $279,000 From a Brooklyn Bank

Greeting the manager of a Brooklyn bank with a cheery "Hi, Michael" as he drove up to work yesterday morning, a young holdup man drew a gun, forced the manager to open the vault and then escaped with $279,000, according to the police.

As reconstructed by the police, the holdup—one of the biggest bank robberies recorded here—began when the manager, Michael Gleason, parked his car in front of the Chemical Bank branch at 2730 Coney Island Avenue in the Sheepshead Bay section, a few minutes before 9 A.M.

As he got out of his car, the police said, Mr. Gleason was greeted by a young man seated in a red Ford parked nearby. When Mr. Gleason said he did not recognize the young man who had called him by name, the man reportedly got out of the car, showed a .38-caliber pistol and asked, "Do you recognize this?"

The man was also armed with a hand grenade, according to the police. They said he also showed Mr. Gleason a walkie-talkie and told him that he and an accomplice were using it to monitor police calls.

Forcing the manager into the bank at gunpoint, the holdup man then ordered him and the assistant manager, Joyce Tyle, to open the vault, according to the police. They said the man took two large canvas sacks awaiting delivery to the Federal Reserve system.

The gunman was described as blond, about 25 years old, 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighing 160 pounds, with a mustache and wearing a brown jacket.

His accomplice, who reportedly drove the getaway car, was about the same age and also had a mustache, according to the police. They said he was 6 feet 1 inch tall, weighed 180 pounds and was dressed entirely in black.

Lesson in Biology Leads to a Ferment

By MAX H. SEIGEL

A high school experiment in winemaking that allegedly turned into a wine-tasting party for a class of 15-year-old and 16-year-old students has led to the dismissal of their teacher and a lawsuit seeking her reinstatement with back pay.

Diane Greble, a 25-year-old chemistry and biology teacher at Farmingdale High School on Long Island, had begun an experiment in her three 10th-grade biology classes last December to show that "yeast produces alcohol and carbon dioxide during respiration without oxygen." Her students were told to bring in sugar, grape juice, yeast, glass jugs and balloons.

On Feb. 6, the last day of the school term, the experiment ended and Mrs. Greble allowed each pupil "a small taste" of the wine, she said in papers filed in Federal Court in Brooklyn.

But a spokesman for the school said that "there was a party going on" in Mrs. Greble's classroom. The students had brought cakes into the class and party paper. In addition, the spokesman said, one student walked into the dean's office smelling of wine. When he was asked where he had got it, he said he had been invited into Mrs Greble's class by a friend who was one of her students.

Besides asking for reinstatement, Mrs. Greble is seeking compensatory and punitive damages.

The teacher contended in her suit that similar experiments had been carried out in the past and that her department chairman, Seymour Kopilow, had commented favorably when she told him she was carrying it out.

After the Feb. 6 incident, the principal, John McLennan, asked Mr. Kopilow, "Is it normal to have such an experiment?" He was told it was.

"Is it normal to have the wine tasted?" he asked.

"Yes," Mr. Kopilow replied. "Only one or two ounces are made."

But Mr. McLennan said yesterday: "This wasn't the ordinary experimental amount you or someone would expect would be more. It was wine—intoxicating liquor. No parent ever sends a child to school to receive alcohol. If he did, it would be against the law."

Mrs. Greble said that three days after the Feb. 6 wine tasting, she received word that she had been suspended. And then, about two weeks after that, while she was in a hospital for a treatment of an infection, she received a letter saying she had been dismissed by the school board.

views of Mayor Beame, endorsed only the estate tax and stock transfer tax proposals, asserting that the rest of the program needs further study.

Even before public announcement of the task force report yesterday, details of the proposals and opposition to them had began to circulate, with Mayor Beame and his aides questioning the equity of tax relief for the rich at a time when the city is laying off employees and closing hospitals, schools and day-care centers to conform to its austerity-ridden three-year fiscal plan.

At a news conference in the law offices of Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, where he is a partner, Mr. DeWind acknowledged these difficulties, but he said the cost of not enacting tax reliefs for business and businessmen would be a further loss of companies and jobs and even more lost tax revenues.

He made a particular appeal for enactment of the stock transfer tax proposal during the current session of the Legislature to head off what he called "the almost sure loss of a thousand more jobs from Wall Street to New Jersey."

Eleven Wall Street firms already have rented offices in Jersey City and Hoboken, N.J., and others are known to be negotiating leases. These firms—stock specialists and market makers who trade for their own accounts—are acting under the impetus of the stock transfer tax, which for them is an added cost of doing business.

"But the low-paid, unskilled and undereducated are left behind. Thus, ultimately, the loss of business is borne by those least able to pay."

The task force found that the combined burden of the state and city income taxes means that a married man with two children who lives in the city must earn $33,676 a year to take home $25,000, but only $30,651 to take home the same sum if he lives in New Jersey or Connecticut, which do not tax earned incomes.

"Obviously," the report said, "these taxes on income, standing alone, provide a compelling incentive to members of middle and upper-level business management and to other large income earners to relocate business headquarters, or indeed entire business operations, in New Jersey or Connecticut."

Reducing the highest tax bracket, on earned taxable incomes of $25,000 a year or more, from 15 to 10 percent would not completely wipe out the differences between city residents and residents of Connecticut or New Jersey.

The members of the task force who fully endorsed the report were, besides Mr. DeWind:

Gunman in Midtown Kills Garbage Company Owner

By JOSEPH B. TREASTER

A 46-year-old owner of a New Jersey garbage collecting company was shot to death in a midtown Manhattan parking garage yesterday in what the police called the apparent work of a professional gunman.

About two hours earlier, a 78-year-old woman was shot and killed in the doorway of her Valley Cottage, N. Y., home by a gunman in a passing car who the police said might have been seeking her son-in-law, an independent carting contractor in Rockland County.

It was unclear yesterday whether the two murders were related, though both had the earmarks of gangland slayings.

The victim in midtown, Alfred DeNardi of 122 Smoke Rise Drive, Warren Township, N. J., was in the 20th Century Parking Garage at 320 East 48th Street, between First and Second Avenues, with a 38-year-old woman companion at 1:30 A.M., waiting for an attendant to deliver his 1976 Cadillac, when he was shot four times.

"It looks like a hit, a rubout," said Detective John Stewart of the Third Homicide Zone. "It looks like they came to put him away."

People in buildings near the garage told the police that shortly after hearing the shots they saw a man hop into the passenger side of a waiting car, which then sped off.

The police said they had been unable to obtain a full description of the car or either of the two persons in it. They said they believed that the shooting had been done with a .38-caliber weapon.

The police said that Mr. DeNardi was carrying $150 in cash but there was no attempt at robbery.

Speaking of the gunman, Detective Stewart said: "The gunman races in from the street and pumps four shots into DeNardi. Then he just turns and flees. That's all he wanted. There was no attempt at robbery."

The police said Mr. DeNardi's companion whom they described as "a recent acquaintance," was unhurt. They said that they were withholding her identity during the early stages of the investigation.

Detective Stewart said it was not clear whether the "hit" had been carried out by members of organized crime or an independent team.

In the earlier slaying, Caroline Nadel was shot in the head about 11:30 P.M. Wednesday as she stepped onto the front porch of her Valley Cottage home. The bullet was fired from a car that sped away.

Her son-in-law, Natale Schettino, who has been trying in recent months to establish an independent carting company in Rockland County, told the police that he had received threatening phone calls at home earlier Wednesday evening.

On March 2, three of Mr. Schettino's five garbage trucks were burned in two separate nighttime incidents that the police called the apparent work of an arsonist.

Albert Anzelone, a former Wall Street executive who now owns the Carriage House restaurant on Staten Island, was convicted of shooting at the windows and of one count of perjury.

And, the fourth defendant, Robert Barbieri, a retired Housing Authority policeman, was convicted on two counts of perjury.

The four all lived at the time on the same block on which the black family—Mr. and Mrs. Alberto Charles and their three children—wished to settle.

The United States Attorney for the Eastern District, David G. Trager, said the verdict "vindicates the most fundamental civil rights of our citizens as well as the rule of law."

He added: "This conviction should stand as a warning that lawlessness of the kind reflected here will not be tolerated by the community."

A similar view was expressed by Eleanor Holmes Norton, head of the city's Office of Human Rights. She said, "This conviction for civil-rights violation by an all-white jury vindicates my faith that New Yorkers will not tolerate racist violence in this city."

The four were indicted last Oct. 14. During the four-week trial before Judge Edward R. Neaher, the Government had sought to show through its principal witness, Gerald Maddalone, a police office named as a co-conspirator but not as a defendant, that those indicted had engaged in a conspiracy to vandalize the home at 351 Milton Avenue.

According to testimony at the trial, the defendants shot out the windows of the house with BB guns on April 7, 1972; on April 10, they tried to raise money so a white family could purchase the $37,500 house; on April 12 or 13, they were said to have flooded it with water, and on April 22, the house was set afire.

Mr. Maddalone had testified that he, himself, had splashed paint over the door of the house the same night the windows were shot out.

Defense lawyers sought to discredit the testimony of Mr. Maddalone, charging that he had made a deal to save "his job and his skin."

...2 Piers in Jersey Owned by Railroad Destroyed by Fire

A fire in two abandoned piers on the New Jersey waterfront in Weehawken last night sent flames and acrid smoke billowing hundreds of feet above the Palisades.

Residents on both sides of the Hudson River could see the intense blaze, which burst through collapsing sections of the covered piers. The flames appeared to explode, sending reddish-orange jets skyward.

A strong wind from the southwest fed the flames and sent the black smoke drifting across the river toward Manhattan, where apartment dwellers lined roofs and terraces to view the blaze.

The fire broke out around 9 P.M. on Piers 4 and 5 at the foot of 49th and 50th Streets in Weehawken on the border with West New York. About 100 fire fighters from several surrounding communities and New York harbor fireboats were called to battle the blaze.

Weehawken fire officials said the "tinder dry" piers were old New York Central Railroad facilities taken over by Conrail. The cause of the blaze was not known.

Mr. Tudor contends that under Rumanian law, Mr. Orghidan's widow, Martha, was entitled to at least half of that collection.

Mr. Tudor said that he had personally cared for Mrs. Orghidan and that when she died at the age of 82 in 1967, she had left him her estate.

He now claims her half of the Orghidan collection as well as the other half on the grounds that the Rumanian government had previously failed to comply with its own law.

"We've been fighting for so long," said Mr. Tudor, adding that if he gained possession of the collection, he would sell some of the coins, but donate the remainder to the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Nicholai Horodinca, a public information officer at the Rumanian Embassy in Washington, said that he had not been aware of the legal action until a reporter had phoned him for comment.

It was unclear last night how, besides taking over the Carriage House Hotel, Mr. Tudor could force the Rumanian Government to relinquish the collection in the event that he was victorious in court.

Truck Jumps Curb and Kills a Man, 76

A truck belonging to the city's Department of Water Resources jumped a curb and ran into a group of people at Cross Bay Boulevard and Sutter Avenue in Ozone Park, Queens, killing a 76-year-old man and injuring two other persons. The police said the truck's brakes apparently failed. The dead man was identified as Natale DeBlasio of 133-20 Cross Bay Boulevard.

Paroled Murderer Gets Life in 2d Case

Charles Yukl, who went to prison for more than five years for the murder of a young woman and was later paroled in 1973 because he was a "model inmate," has been sentenced to life in prison for the nearly identical slaying of Karen Schlegel, a 23-year-old aspiring actress, in Greenwich Village nearly two years ago. While imposing a 15-year minimum term before Mr. Kukl is eligible for parole, Acting Supreme Court Justice Joseph Martinis also recommended that the 41-year-old Mr. Yukl not be paroled as long as there was a risk he would commit another murder.

Partial Closing of Montefiore Urged

The Health Systems Agency explained yesterday that it had not meant that all of Montefiore Hospital should be shut down when it included the hospital among 30 described in a draft proposal as "vulnerable" for closing. The agency, a federally financed nonprofit organization that has been delegated by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to devise a comprehensive plan for health services in New York, said it recommended that 332 of Montefiore's 788 beds be eliminated and that the rest of the facility be preserved.

Westchester Bus Lines Denied Increase

The State Transportation Commissioner, Raymond Schuler, denied a petition for fare increases sought by three Westchester County bus companies. He said they had failed to demonstrate their need. The companies — Westchester Street Transportation, Liberty Coaches and Club Transportation, had submitted the petition asking Mr. Schuler to reconsider an earlier decision to deny the increases.

From the Police Blotter:

A bank guard shot and critically wounded one of four robbers who held up the Bank of Commerce at 1415 Avenue Z, in the Sheepshead Bay section of Brooklyn. The three other robbers, who were armed with shotguns, escaped with an undetermined amount of money. . . . An 18-year-old Queens youth was stabbed twice in the abdomen by one of six other youths near his home for no known reason. The victim, Robert Hollans of 95-20 32d Avenue, Corona, was listed in critical condition at the City Hospital in Elmhurst.

American Ice Cream Has Invaded Britain

By JUDITH WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, June 3 — Prince Charles has tried it twice. Lee Remick had it on her birthday. Paul McCartney, Elliot Richardson, James Coburn and Dirk Bogarde have queued up for it. And thousands of British students, European tourists, and homesick Americans have suddenly discovered it.

American ice cream has invaded Britain.

"English ice cream has always been terrible," said Dee Wells, a writer, and author of the best-selling novel "Jane," who came to London over 20 years ago. "I used to buy one of those square ice cream bars in the park for my daughter. It would melt, but it would never lose its shape."

Until recently here, the words "ice cream" conjured up a vision of a bland, puffy substance filled more with air than anything else, and never ever with cream.

"When an American comes to London he tries to find an agreeable substitute for the things he misses," said Leslie Slote, a food enthusiast and former press secretary under both Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller.

"I began an immediate search for ice cream," said Mr. Slote, who is an executive with RCA here. "To my horror I discovered that there was no good ice cream in the whole United Kingdom. I immediately went into a state of depression, which has only recently lifted."

What lifted Mr. Slote's depression and suddenly altered the ice cream market in Britain was the emergence of an American Revolution that began quietly a few years ago, and exploded last December with the opening of the first of a chain of Dayvilles 32 flavors ice cream parlors, modeled on the Baskin-Robbins concept.

Business Growing

This week the 10th, 11th, and 12th shops open, an additional 14 will be opened by July, and 100 are expected by the end of the year.

Gabriel Gutman, a 38-year-old former American stockbroker who brought the multiflavor concept to Britain, is rhapsodic about the opportunities for real cream-based ice cream in this country.

"There is superb cream in England, and excellent chocolate," he said. "Nobody ever married the two together. It's been driving me crazy for years. It's amazing nobody ever brought it over before."

"They don't know from ice cream in this country," said the actress Lee Remick, who has lived in Britain for almost seven years, and who was driving by Dayvilles with her son the day it opened last December.

"There was that ever-loving familiar sight — all white and clean. We went crazy," said the actress — now appearing in a stage production of "Bus Stop" here — who admitted to a preference for the toffee caramel crunch flavor.

Mr. Gutman estimates that weekly sales in the individual stores average more than £2,000 (about $3,400) a week.

"If you're prepared to wait 20 minutes for an ice cream cone on a Sunday afternoon, you'll get served," observed 24-year-old Steve Dench, manager of the Queensway branch of Dayvilles.

"People here like it because it's so good," said Mr. Dench who was wearing a red, white and blue Dayville's 32 flavors T-shirt. "They've never really had ice cream before."

The Queensway branch is located in the middle of a busy commercial neighborhood, near Chinese, Italian and Greek restaurants, late-night supermarkets, and endless medium-priced hotels. Mr. Dench has noted some rather unpredictable ethnic preferences for particular flavors.

Americans' Favorites

"The Chinese all go for coconut," he said: "The Americans prefer rocky road or German chocolate cake, and the Arabs tend to like straight strawberry, chocolate or vanilla."

While the Dayvilles operation concentrates on the fast-food concept and on the gamut of flavors from banana split to bubble gum to star spangled berry (the flavor of the month for July), the more sedate, quality end of the market is represented by a company called New England Ice Cream.

Sold pre-packaged in specialty shops, supermarkets, and fancy delicatessens, New England ice cream is the inspiration of Bill and Susan Blackburn, two passionate ice cream devotees, who are dedicated to producing high-quality ice cream, using only natural ingredients.

This July the Blackburns, both American expatriots, will launch yet another sybaritic temptation, when they open an old-fashioned soda fountain at Harrod's.

Once again their emphasis will be on natural ingredients and quality. "We'll have milkshakes, floats and banana splits. There will be real blueberry sauce, genuine hot fudge and butterscotch. It will be a very sensuous, very voluptuous thing," said the slender Mrs. Blackburn.

If all goes according to plan, practically everyone in Britain will soon weight a pound or two more.

Spain's Friendly but Discreet Q

By ENID NEMY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—Queen Sofia stood in the drawing room of Blair House today, posing for photographers.

"I should say 'cheese,'" she said, as her face broke into a wide smile.

Smiling comes easily to the 37-year-old Greek-born Spanish Queen, who is accompanying her husband, King Juan Carlos I, on the first visit by a Spanish head of state to American soil. So do humor and the kind of naturalness, studied or not, that put people around her at ease.

She was relaxed and friendly today at the first personal press conference she has ever held. She was also a model of discretion. The quips and repartee and easy conversation were replaced by slower, more thoughtful responses, when questions turned to certain areas.

She adroitly sidestepped political matters, and almost always took away with one hand what she gave with the other when the discussion centered on women's rights or the women's movement.

She was, she said, "independent in thinking," and she would want her daughters, Elena, 13, and Cristina, 10, to go to university and have a career.

"It is fundamental in life to have a career," she said.

However, she added, "in a family, a man takes first place. . . . He has to look after the family."

Something Else

She said that she believed that children were a woman's responsibility but that women should not restrict themselves to just that. When the children were in school, or in day care centers, women needed something else to occupy themselves.

She does not, she said, think it unfair that although she herself was the oldest child, as a woman it had not been possible for her to inherit the throne of Greece.

"I never even thought of it," she said.

Would her daughters, both older than her 8-year-old son, Felipe, be eligible to inherit the Spanish throne?

"Not at the moment," she said. "But anything could happen." A slight pause and then: "Whatever is good for the country."

Did she believe her son would be King of Spain?

"For the moment, yes," she replied.

Royal Connections

The Queen, daughter of the former Queen Frederika and the late King Paul of Greece, and connected with the royal houses of most of Europe, said she did not believe that being Queen of a country was anything special.

"Only if you can help," she amended. "People think something grandiose and fantastic. . . . You have problems and responsibilities like every one else."

What were the duties of a modern Queen?

"Just to be there and help," she said. "To look after whatever is needed and whoever needs help."

Aside from increased responsibilities, she noted that her life hadn't changed to any great degree since her husband ascended the throne. They still live in the house (Zarzuela Palace) they have lived in since their marriage 14 years ago, the children attended public schools, and she was continuing with her course in contemporary humanities at Madrid University.

Her recent visit to a Jewish congregation in Madrid was "part of the course we do.... There are various seminars and one of them was Jewish."

She evaded naming philosophers who impressed or influenced her. Asked about Jean Paul Sartre, she replied tersely, "he didn't believe in God." (As a Greek princess, Sofia was brought up in the Greek Orthodox faith but converted to Roman Catholicism after her marriage.)

She explained that her children's life in public schools required keeping a "balance."

"That is difficult," she admitted. "To be among the people and be as they are, and yet not as they are."

She said she tried to accompany the children to school each morning, and pick them up in the afternoon, because, aside from family vacations in Majorca, skiing on a mountain near Madrid, and Saturday and Sunday lunches, "it is the only time one can really speak to them."

She was asked whether she believed in striking children, or denying privileges, as a form of discipline.

"I believe in discipline by reason, instead of punishment," she said. "It is the only way one can get self-responsibility."

Affairs of State

Despite the fact that women are taking a more active role in Spanish life, and men may be becoming more amenable to it, she said she did not usually discuss affairs of state or offer her husband advice on them.

"He does it very well on his own," she said.

Although she is notably less formal, and more at ease in crowds than her husband, the Queen denied that she had been responsible for the royal couple leaving their limousine and walking through the crowds on a recent visit to Catalonia in Spain. The gesture was a popular one and widely reported.

Family Tensions: Playing Out the Old ...

By RICHARD FLASTE

Dr. Philip Guerin, the psychiatrist who heads the Center for Family Learning in New Rochelle, N.Y., was discussing the complexities of family relationships, when suddenly words failed him.

He jumped up to a blackboard and, like a football coach outlining the next pass pattern, he started to draw circles, squares and arrows. The squares were generations of men in the family, the circles were the women. He explained how, in one instance, a grandmother's relationship to a favored granddaughter—resulting in veiled resentment from the girl's mother—might be just the thing to perpetuate family conflicts that spanned generations.

Dr. Guerin uses the "systems approach" to family problems that was largely developed by Dr. Murray Bowen, a psychiatrist at Georgetown University in Washington.

Lines of a Script

The New Rochelle center has become the main arm of that approach here. The center was begun three years ago but opened its clinic for family therapy only last September.

One object of the approach is to help families realize that even the most trivial recurring family fights—fights over a child's taking out the garbage, or doing the dishes, or squeezing the toothpaste tube in the wrong spot—are not truly trivial but rather the lines of a script that could go back as many generations as one wished to look.

So it is missing the mark to single out one child (often called the "symptomatic child") as the problem. If anything, when one blames a single family member, it only takes the focus off the whole web of "ghosts," as they are called, that have led to the present conflict. It sometimes allows the parents to stand together as a team—"We parents"—against the child, who has learned his role well, too, and will play it to the hilt, continuing the cycle. (Some children find it less painful to draw the parents' fire than to see the parents fight.)

A couple of families at the center the other day were prime examples. In one instance, the problem brought to the center was that of a teen-age boy who was rebelling against school and his new mother—the divorced father had just remarried, to a woman whom the teen-ager initially approved of.

The father had come from a family in which the man in the house was always "the good guy" and the mother was the disciplinarian. He immediately relinquished the disciplining role to his new wife. While the first wife had been as permissive as he, the new wife accepted the responsibility with relish. She had come from a family in which she had been the "responsible child," the one used to taking on burdens. The boy started fighting both parents and everybody else; the family was in turmoil.

Another family at the center was similar. They had an 8-year-old son who couldn't be told to do anything. He always had an argument, a defense. Very bright. Very difficult.

What he had done already, according to this viewpoint, was to play into the family system. The mother had come from a family in which appearances were extremely important. She had been nagging her husband all the time to do things neatly, quickly, do them right.

The husband was not cooperating. He'd sleep or watch television or play golf. It was infuriating. Then came the boy, and he fit right into the plot. He fought back and kept the issue alive. In that house, for years, there was a fight every Saturday night when it was time to wash the boy's hair. He regularly missed his school bus; when he did get to school he was unmanageable and the guidance counselor recommended therapy.

The therapy at the center for both these families was not an immediate attempt to illustrate on the blackboard what was happening. The first step was to get the fathers more involved in raising the children, a simple move that immediately disrupted the systems.

Some Improvement

There has already been some improvement in each family, freeing the therapists to move on to the relationship between husband and wife.

The center is "action oriented," which means that a family member is not put on the couch to work out all past relationships through talk, using the therapist as a foil. Instead there are assignments. A mother might be sent home to visit her parents in Philadelphia to see how their relationship to her has influenced her relationship to her own child. She would have to do it alone, not with child or husband, both of whom might be buffers protecting her from early conflicts.

"She goes into the house," Dr. Guerin said, "and is greeted at the door by both parents. They sit in the living room, and three minutes later the father exits, leaving mother and daughter alone.

And it starts—all the subtle interactions that Dr. Guerin describes as part of "the insidious process by which scripts repeat themselves." For instance, the grandmother might begin by being helpful in a way that's actually criticism in the form of advice—the very same kind of "help" her daughter has been offering the grandchild.

Dr. Guerin says that the tendency of scripts to repeat themselves is borne out despite the commonly made pledge not to commit the errors one's own parents made.

Often, these days, that pledge is buttressed by the fact that the families are separated by hundreds, even thousands, of miles, leading to much talk about the isolation of the "nuclear family."

But Dr. Guerin says that the nuclear family is, "to some degree a myth." People carry their extended families around with them, in their heads, even if the grandparents are continents away, living or dead.

Grandparents, Too

When grandparents and great-grandparents are alive, and nearby, the center frequently brings them in to participate in the therapy. The whole idea is to understand the scenario and then take some measure of control over it. This isn't really a matter of "cure."

"I believe that problems don't go away, they are recycled," Dr. Guerin said. But at least to some extent the blaming decreases, the problems get out of hand less often, th... ...ter and a lifelong Flatbush resident.

"We met with the landlords in March," Mr. Chertoff said. "They said the vacancy rate was their biggest problem. Even 10 or 15 years ago there was a waiting list to get into most of these buildings."

Elaborating, one owner, Arnold Marshel, said that some buildings had vacancies of 5 to 7 percent, but the picture varies from building to building or block to block. "We still have an influx of younger people from Manhattan and out of town," he said. One of the attractions is a rent level lower than Manhattan's for comparable apartments.

For example, one-bedroom apartments in his own postwar luxury buildings with doorman service rent for $250 to $290 a month. The "top of the line" two-bedroom apartments with terraces rent for $400 to $425 a month. Standard two-bedroom apartments are about $290.

Another owner, Samuel Teitelbaum, said that two-bedroom apartments in his elevator buildings rented for $230 to $260 a month.

City Funds Campaign

The funds for the advertising campaign for the tour were supplied by the city's Human Rights Commission under its neighborhood stabilization program. As with similar grants in the home-owning community of Laurelton, in Queens, the object is to help stablize areas where an increase in minority population could discourage a balancing inflow of whites, or encourage white flight.

But while owners and tenants—both white and black—have an interets in stabilization, they are still apart, apparently, on the question of tenant ownership. Mr. Markowitz, for example, said he favored "tenant management" and even tenant committees to screen new tenants. But he said that tenant ownership, through gradual conversion to cooperatives, would not be feasible.

Mr. Teitelbaum, however, said that cooperative ownership would open up mortgage financing for many properties, leading to better management and maintenance.

Exchange Lifts Limit In Nonaccount Trades

Investors will be able to place isolated orders to buy or sell $2,000 worth of securities without having to open an account with a stock broker, the New York Stock Exchange reported yesterday after the regular monthly meeting of directors. It was the first formal meeting of William M. Batten, newly named chairman of the board. Investors have been able to buy or sell only $1,000 of securities without opening an account, the exchange said.

13 SCHOOL BOARDS CHIDED BY GOLDIN

Comptroller Says They Pay Too Much for Office Space

By EDWARD RANZAL

Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin said yesterday that more than $1 million a year in city money was being wasted by 13 community school district boards on "unnecessary and overly expensive rented office space."

He urged that these boards and five in buildings no longer used as schools be relocated into active school buildings.

The deputy school chancellor, Bernard R. Gifford, agreed generally with Mr. Goldin's recommendations. He said his office had already "convinced some community school boards that they should move from their leased spaces to underutilized schools."

Noting "extraordinary variations" in the amount and cost of space rented for the administrative functions of the boards, Mr. Goldin gave as an example Community School Board 15, at 360 Smith Street in the Red Hook-Park Slope area of Brooklyn.

It has 35 employees and rents 28,300 square feet for which the city pays $108,955 a year on a lease that runs until 1991, he said, adding: "This despite the fact that 10 different schools in the districts have sufficient space available to accommodate the school board."

This led Philip Kaplan, president of the board as well as president of the New York City School Board Association, to reply: "Goldin doesn't know what he's talking about. Why doesn't he get the facts correct? First of all, the school board never negotiated the lease or selected the site. We are not charged with the rental."

Mr. Kaplan said that in 1969 the Board of Estimate approved a 20-year lease for the two-story Smith Street building for a day-care center. This was a year before decentralization went into effect, setting up local school boards. The building is owned by the Euclid Avenue Association of West Garden City, Queens.

Because of community opposition, however, the day-care center was never opened and the lease was turned over to the Board of Education. School Board 15 was originally in the basement of an overcrowded high school and in 1972 was moved by the Board of Education into the Smith Street building, Mr. Kaplan said. The central board had taken over the property as an annex for a public school across the street.

Mr. Kaplan said that with the closing of one of the 25 schools in his district this month there will be no available space for his board in any of the other schools.

Mr. Goldin urged the Board of Education to try to terminate leases wherever possible or sublease the space to offset rental costs. He said that boards occupying inactive school buildings were "causing extra expense for such items as building maintenance, utilities and heating oil."

A spokesman for the Board of Education noted that in the late 1960's and early 1970's there was a lack of school space for the 32 local boards. Thus the central Board of Education entertained applications for rented space for the school boards. If the application was approved, it was turned over to the city's Real Estate Department to negotiate a lease. Final approval on the lease was made by the Board of Estimate.

In addition to moving several local school boards from privately leased offices in recent months to currently active schools, Dr. Gifford said seveal schools, Dr. Gifford said several other boards had asked the censibility of breaking leases and moving into schools.

Mr. Goldin said: "We could employ 50 classroom teachers for the amount being wasted on rentals by school districts. I commend the office of the Chancellor for recognizing the seriousness of this problem and for its announced intention to deal with it decisively."

Albany Bishop Heads Catholic Aid Agency

Catholic Relief Services announced in Washington yesterday that Bishop Edwin B. Broderick of the Albany diocese will be the new executive director of the agency. He succeeds Bishop Edward E. Swanstron, 73 years old, who since 1947 has developed the service into a $250-million-a-year American aid agency with programs in 86 countries.

Born in New York City in 1917 Bishop Broderick taught English and history at Cardinal Hayes High School from 1943 until he went to St. Patrick's Cathedral in 1947 as a staff member. He later served as radio and television director for the diocese. In 1954, the late Francis Cardinal Spellman chose him as his secretary. He became auxiliary bishop in 1967 and went to Albany in 1969. Bishop Broderick served on the court-appointed nine-member Citizens' Committee that investigated the 1971 Attica prison uprising. He has been a frequent church spokesman in Albany on legislative matters, including the abortion issue.

"I got mugged," Justice G. Mennen Williams of the Michigan Supreme Court told reporters yesterday, displaying lip stitches and describing how he was beaten and robbed of $70 and credit cards in Detroit the night before. The six-term former Governor, 65, said that three men surprised him outside the apartment door of his secretary, Barbara Patterson, who had asked him to make checks there while she was on vacation. Justice Williams told the police he was bound with telephone cord. The men stole a television and stereo set, but, he said, "they didn't do too good a job of tying me up." He had been unable to tell his secretary the news, he said, because her vacation phone number was in his stolen wallet.

Many a Greenwich villager with a gourmet-cook reputation to uphold starts dinner plans by conferring with Jack Ubaldi, as do some of the better restaurateurs. Mr. Ubaldi started his Florence Meat Market on Jones Street 40 years ago and helped bring up some of his present customers. Many of those in the arts and professions, too, are attracted by his smile, the hi-fi classical music and the cat, Minou. Now at 65, Mr. Ubaldi has "retired," though he still spends several days a week with his crew of relatives and longtime employees.

On June 16, at the New School for Social Research, Mr. Ubaldi will teach for six Wednesday nights a 20-member class on meat selection and preperation, part of the school's summer schedule of "Courses You Have Always Wanted to Take But Didn't Know Where to Find." The first lesson, he said yesterday, will be on three kinds of veal—baby, grass fed and milk fed. We'll bone it and stuff it and then draw some names out of a hat," Mr. Ubaldi said. "Every night some people will take their next dinner home."

An NBC "Saturday Night" television sequence, presented as "comedy" April 24, backfired on the news media yesterday. Film clips from the show, depicting Claudine Longet "shooting" a series of downhill skiers, helped convince an Aspen, Colo., judge to ban the press from the singer's preliminary hearing June 10 on manslaughter charges. Miss Longet, former wife of Andy Williams, also a singer, is accused of felony manslaughter in the shooting death of Vladimir Sabich, a skier with whom she had shared a house for two years. District Judge George Lohr, citing excessive advance publicity, also ordered a gag rule for all lawyers and witnesses in the case.

The F.B.I. Director, Clarence M. Kelley, is expected back in Washington this weekend after having a small facial skin cancer, "about one-eighth inch in diameter," removed in Kansas City. A year ago the former Kansas City police chief, 64, was in the same clinic for removal of a "minor" cancer from his left arm.

A stay of his Navy discharge for homosexuality, sought by Ens. Vernon E. Berg 3d, has been turned down in Washington by Federal Judge Gerhard Gesell. The 24-year-old son of a Navy chaplain had challenged aspects of his January court-martial and had cited a little-known Defense Department legal interpretation that homosexuality was not a per se cause for discharge. Judge Gesell ruled that "while the nature of the [other-than-honorable] discharge can be debated" and "there may have been irregularities in the proceedings," the general principle of the military's homosexuality ban was well established.

Consider the surprise of the Baroness Salvador de López de Tarragoya: While the 70-year-old Parisian was taking a bath yesterday, armed men wrenched a diamond bracelet from her ankle and a diamond ring from her hand. Then they locked her in the bathroom. The six thieves used the service entrance to get into the luxury building before ringing the apartment buzzer and tying up the butler.

Time's Magazines Called on Schedule Despite the Strike

Time Inc. said yesterday that the production of its magazines was proceeding on schedule and that there would be "no change in the magazines whatsoever" despite a strike by nearly 60 percent of its editorial employees.

"It is our belief that we can carry on and produce the magazines no matter how long the strike goes on," said Donald M. Wilson, vice president for corporate and public affairs, as several dozen employees picketed outside the Time-Life Building in Rockefeller Center.

Mr. Wilson said that most of Time's correspondents were not on strike and that there were enough senior employees in New York to pick up the slack for those who were, but he declined to allow interviews with people at work.

The Newspaper Guild struck Time Inc. Wednesday evening—the first strike against the company since it was founded in 1922—after failing to reach agreement on a new contract. No negotiations were held yesterday, and none were scheduled.

The chief stumbling block appears to be Time's insistence that part of all raises be based on merit and the union's insistence that everyone at the same salary level get the same raise. The company has offered an average 17 percent increase over two years, and the union wants 18 percent, so the amount of money did not appear to be a major problem, only how it should be distributed.

Employees at Time Inc. are not required to join the Newspaper Guild, and only 623 out of 1,052 (59 percent) have actually done so, although all of them receive the benefits that the union wins. Top minimum salary for writers is $425 a week.

Next week's issue of Time magazine is scheduled to close tonight. Mr. Wilson said there would be "no change in the number of pages, no change in the composition or number of pages, no change in the pictures, no change at all."

Tuna Fishermen Win Delay

WASHINGTON, June 3 (UPI)—The United States Court of Appeals here is allowing fishermen to continue catching porpoises in their nets while the legality of the method, which kills many porpoises, is tested in court. Three appellate judges agreed after hearing oral arguments yesterday to delay the effect of an order Federal District Judge Charles R. Richey issued May 11 giving the fishermen until May 31 to halt the practice.

BEAME UNIT SETS HIRING REFORMS

Method of Filling Posts in the Civil Service Would Be More Flexible

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

Mayor Beame's Management Advisory Board is preparing a controversial Civil Service reform plan that would strengthen city management's hand by permitting a much wider choice of applicants for a vacant job.

Instead of the current regulation that an appointment must be made from among the top three candidates in the list of tested and qualified job applicants, the board's approach would let the city range among 10 to 20 ranking applicants and better suit a job to a person's background and experience.

The proposal is being formulated in private by the advisory board for submission to Mr. Beame some time this summer. While the board recognizes the plan will further antagonize municipal labor, it nonetheless believes that something drastic is needed to improve management practices and get more from workers in this era of forced austerity.

The management board, chaired by Richard R. Shinn, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, was created by the Mayor at the height of the fiscal crisis last year to show the city's willingness to heed the business advice of private-industry experts.

A Hard Road to Enactment

The proposal would require a politically hazardous road to adoption beginning with consideration by the Mayor and ending with enactment by the Legislature. But some of its architects point out that the fiscal crisis has already brought about the imposition of a series of once-unthinkable changes, including a large-scale program of layoffs and wage freezes for municipal workers.

The campaign for Civil Service reform already begun, with the Municipal Assistance Corporation warning in its latest report on the city budget that it is imperative that "immediate action" be taken to make the Civil Service more flexible.

However, no one familiar with the project expects quick action, and there is no plan to bring to bring it up in the new round of municipal labor contract negotiations this month. Rather, it would be left for the coming budget year, when, according to the Mayor's office, management reform will be a high priority.

The Mayor's office did not want to discuss Civil Service reform yesterday, and only emphasized that Mr. Beame would formally consider the board's proposals after they were submitted.

At the very least, the mere raising of the subject of retrenching Civil Service is considered of psychological value by some city officials as they seek greater sacrifices from municipal labor. "It adds to the realization that the crisis is the time to deal with the very hard questions," one administration official said.

Under the plan, agency managers and supervisors would have a wider field for choosing appointments in order to seek, for example, not just a qualified accountant, but one whose experience includes transit-accounting experience, if that is the special need in the supervisor's view.

The Matter of Choice

"There would be pre-identified criteria so an administrator could not play patronage games," one official familiar with the proposal said. "It would give more responsibility to managers down the line, which is what the city needs, and help put better people in jobs and allow for more of the intangibles, like rewarding the most qualified."

"We find the most fundamental problem is that management simply has no control over the personnel it gets," another executive familiar with the project asserted. "Imagine trying to run a private business like that?"

A traditional rebuttal from supporters of the existing Civil Service system is that reform can be a cloak for retreating to old-time patronage abuses.

Workable language that describes the more liberal job criteria without inviting subjective abuses by managers is one of the tasks still being worked on by the management board, which has eight other members besides Mr. Shinn, included a labor representative. It is served by a small staff headed by Jacob B. Ukeles, the executive director, who is on a leave from the New School for Social Research. He is chairman of the Department of Urban Affairs there.

The Shinn panel previously submitted an extensive study of the city's complicated pension systems—not yet acted on by the Mayor—which recommended that the city eventually should bolster the systems with $208 million more in annual contributions.

The panel also helped shape the new Management by Objectives system in use in the city's fire and highway agencies, a system of decentralized authority designed to allow commissioners far greater responsibility and freedom from interference.

5 IN BROOKLYN HELD IN POLICE BRIBERY

Five Brooklyn men were arrested on bribery and gambling charges by the Brooklyn District Attorney's office this week and a sixth was still being sought in the case, which was the culmination of an eight-month undercover operation.

The undercover men, three police officers from the 90th Precinct in Williamsburg, were not disguised. But throughout the investigation they pretended to be corrupt officers.

They succeeded in winning the trust of their targets so thoroughly that when two of the bribery suspects were arrested by the Brooklyn District Attorney's office, they asked the police officers to look after their gambling records, one of the police officers said.

Lakeridge has done it again!

On the heels of Lakeridge's recent selection as 1975 Grand Award Winner as the best second home community in the nation in a national competition sponsored by Better Homes & Gardens Magazine and the National Association of Home Builders, Lakeridge was again chosen an award winner. This time, in the prestigious 1976 Professional Awards Program sponsored by The American Society of Landscape Architects, as the only winner in the housing category.

These awards are a tribute to the comprehensive planning, exellence of design and concern for the environment that typify Lakeridge, and make it one of the most sought-after communities for both vacation-home and primary-home living.

There are more reasons as well. Such as the two beautiful clubhouses that feature both indoor and outdoor swimming and tennis, whirlpool bath, gyms, saunas, lounges, snack bar, game rooms, arts & crafts, and much more. There are also many additional tennis courts, paddle tennis courts, riding stables, cross-country skiing, and ski slopes with a double chair lift, snowmaking and ski lodge. It's all private and here now, and all paid for in your minimal monthly association fee along with all outside maintenance and 24-hour security service. And nature provides a great bonus. Lakeridge is adjacent to a clear mountain lake and almost surrounded by a 2000 acre state forest.

See Lakeridge today and become a winner too. Two to four bedroom homes from $42,500 to $65,000. 90% financing available. Write Lakeridge, Dept. "Had the intent been to cover the entire judicial system or process, wording to that effect would have been employed rather than the restrictive term of 'criminal justice system.'"

Judge Cooke pointed to a joint statement issued by New York City's five District Attorneys and Mr. Nadjari shortly after the special office was established.

"Decisively and constituting an admission by the special prosecutor," Judge Cooke wrote, "we find the declaration therein. 'It was the intent of this order to supersede only in those cases dealing with corruption strictly to the criminal justice process.'

"Of even greater significance than the agreement itself," the judge said, was Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller's statement a few days later in which he said: 'The scope of the special prosecutor's assignment is to investigate and prosecute corruption at all levels of the criminal justice system.'"

On several occasions Mr. Nadjari has said that agreement was not relevant to his mandate.

In the 14-page majority opinion today, Judge Cooke was joined by Judges Jacob D. Fuchsberg, Domenick L. Gabrielli and Sol M. Wachtler.

The decision affirmed in most respects a ruling handed down two months ago by the Appellate Division in Brooklyn, but its language was far more sweeping and it disagreed with the lower court in two areas.

The lower court relied primarily on the fact that the Queens indictment did not relate to a "corrupt act by a public servant" because the police officer only feigned acceptance of the alleged bribe from the lawyer, Philip Dondi.

The Court of Appeals rejected this reasoning, saying that "the officer need not be corrupt himself" for Mr. Nadjari to have jurisdiction. Even so, the court said, the case did not belong to Mr. Nadjari because the alleged bribery related to a civil and not a criminal matter.

The lower court had also dismissed the bribery charges against Mr. Dondi, who was represented by Patrick M. Wall, and said he would have to be reindicted. The Court of Appeals said the indictment should not dismissed and in*stead should be transferred to* Queens District Attorney, Nicholas Ferraro.

The strongly worded dissent to the high court's decision was written by chief Judge Charles D. Breitel and joined in by Judges Matthew J. Jasen and Hugh R. R. Jones.

Judge Breitel said it was "jurisprudential folly" for the court to hear this case because improper procedures had been used in bringing it to the court. But he did discuss the merits of the case and found the reasoning of the court's majority "unpersuasive."

First, he said, Mr. Nadjari had jurisdiction because a police officer's testimony about an automobile accident related to his official duties, which include the enforcement of traffic or*dinances.*

Second and more important, the Chief Judge said, the language of the executive order creating Mr. Nadjari's office "sweeps up, and is intended to sweep up, all acts however tenuously related to the enforcement of law."

At the end of his 12-page dissent, Judge Breitel obliquely criticized Governor Carey for not having clarified Mr. Nadjari's jurisdiction.

"Indeed, despite the present Governor's publicized review of the special prosecutor's performance in office, the Governor did not see fit to limit the scope of his power, something he could and can do with a stroke of the pen," Judge Breitel said.

He also chided the judges in the majority for their heavy reliance on the September 1972 agreement among the city's five prosecutors and Mr. Nadjari.

"Diplomatic ententes among affected local prosecutors and the special prosecutor of course do not have the force or law and are hardly interpretive of restrictions or limitations of the executive order."

4 PLANS WEIGHED ON NADJARI POST

Lefkowitz May Give Cases to 5 District Attorneys

By MARCIA CHAMBERS

Louis J. Lefkowitz, the State Attorney General, is considering at least four options for the future of Maurice H. Nadjari's office, one of which would require the special prosecutor to turn over new cases to the city's five district attorneys after July 1.

In effect, such a proposal would eventually phase out the special prosecutor's office, created by former Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller in 1972 following the Knapp Commission's report documenting widespread corruption in the Police Department.

In September 1972, Mr. Nadjari was empowered by executive order to supercede the city's district attorneys in in*vestigating and prosecuting* corruption in the city's criminal-justice system.

According to persons familiar with Mr. Lefkowitz's thinking, the four options are:

¶Allowing Mr. Nadjari to continue his work independently and for a time not yet specified.

¶Dismissing him from his post at the end of this month, when the six months Mr. Lefkowitz gave the prosecutor to complete his work expires.

¶Allowing Mr. Nadjari to continue to handle corruption indictments and investigations already under way, but requiring him to turn over new cases to the district attorneys.

¶Allowing the special prosecutor to continue to handle corruption indictments and investigations already under way, but appointing a second prose*cutor to handle all new cases* after July 1.

It could not immediately be determined whether any or all of these options were discussed at a 50-minute meeting Governor Carey held with Mr. Lefkowitz late yesterday after*noon at the Governor's Manhattan* office.

After the meeting, the Governor's office issued a brief statement that gave no hint of the substance of the talks. It said: "The Attorney General and I met today. We have again reviewed the matter of the special deputy Attorney General. We shall meet again in keeping with our desire to maintain continuous discussions on the subject."

Nor could it be ascertained whether the Governor and Mr. Lefkowitz had discussed Mr. Nadjari's position on the actions he might take if his power was curbed.

In recent days, Mr. Nadjari has told friends and associates that he would refuse to stay in his post if Mr. Lefkowitz agreed to any request by the Governor to appoint a second prosecutor with full powers to handle new corruption cases after July 1.

It was not clear whether Mr. Nadjari's unwillingness to surrender or share power with a second prosecutor extended to the proposal to turn over new cases to the city's five district attorneys, although he indicated in the past that he opposed such a move.

Change in Housing Code Defeated in Glastonbury

GLASTONBURY, Conn., June 3 (AP)—A referendum to change the local housing code so a young family could continue living in a rural farmhouse without electricity or flush toilets has failed.

Town Clerk Edward J. Friedeberg said an unofficial count showed 944 voters favored the change and 936 were against it. He said that under the town charter code amendments require the approval of 10 per cent of the community's 13,500 registered voters. Town officials and members of the family were not immediately available for comment after the vote yesterday.

The amendment would have exempted all structures built before July 1967 from a new housing code in this tobacco-growing suburb of Hartford.

after the subpoena was upheld May 21 by Justice Robert M Haft of State Supreme Court.

The landlord complained to the court that an "unfounded" investigation had been caused by "publicity engendered" by April 22 charges by State Senator Franz S. Leichter, Democrat of Manhattan, that a 1971 lease for 20 years had had its rent increased only three years later.

In reply, the District Attorney's office told the court that the investigation had started earlier—on March 1—and added:

"This investigation seeks to determine whether or not a conspiracy between builders of these centers and New York City public employees has existed and continues to exist to disregard legal leasing rates and building standards and to determine if, in fact, there has been an overcharge to the City of New York with respect to construction costs resulting in an excess leasing rate per child."

The city's group day-care centers serve 35,000 children, with 6,500 more children in family care. The program has been currently operating at $150 million a year in Federal, state and city funds.

A two-pronged investigation was initiated by Comptroller Goldin three weeks ago. For one thing, his engineers are trying to ascertain construction costs to compare with rentals as a possible ground for renegotiating the direct leases.

A number of landlords were understood to have resisted showing records, contending that their contracts did not give any right to audit construction costs. The Comptroller cited a blanket power under the City Charter to conduct audits.

In addition, the Comptroller's auditors are looking into the general administration of day-care programs to detrmine if services are being delivered in accordance with contracts.

In some cases, the Goldin investigators have found that building owners obtained financing with mortgages whose totals exceeded the entire construction cost. This would mean that the landlords had no equity of their own in the premises leased to the city in apparently high rentals.

The New York Times

Robert M. Morgenthau

Last week, Human Resources Administrator J. Henry Smith announced a plan to halt all financing for 49 of the 391 centers as of July 1, to eliminate certain services at 29 others and to make citywide cuts. The aim was to reduce public funding by $34 million to $116.2 million.

Operating funds are allocated through the H.R.A.'s Agency for Child Development. The direct-lease centers, rented through negotiations by the Real Estate Department dating back to 1969 and 1971, are costing $15 million a year in rents and $3 million in real estate taxes paid by the city—and contrast with premises found and rented by child-care agencies themselves.

Suit on Closings Planned

More than 60 centers have formed a Day Care Legal Action Fund, which, according to Gail Cohen, chairman of the parent board of the Children's Day Care Center, plans a suit to keep centers open.

Mrs. Cohen said the cuts had been "arbitrary, not based on quality," and contended that day-care funds were available but were being "squandered for landlord support."

Joyce M. Black, president of the Day Care Council of New York, said her board was seeking to urge alternative economies on Mayor Beame, instead of the closings.

She said these would include streamlining the central administration of the Agency for Child Development, which she said now takes $28 million and which she said she believed might include the "exhorbitant" direct leases the council contends should be renegotiated.

Other council proposals, Mrs. Black said, include allowing admission of a proportion of children whose family income exceeds a state eligibility level, but who would pay fees; giving more discretion on how to spend funds, and replacing centralized insurance by policies taken out by individual centers or other organizations.

Twenty-eight centers lost city financing last December, but some, including the Kissing Monster, 184 Henry Street, Brooklyn, have kept going on parent contributions and volunteer staffing. Another of these has been the Children's Pumphouse, 514 West 126th Street, which said yesterday that city representatives showed up Tuesday and removed furniture they alleged had been paid for by city funds.

The new cutbacks would eliminate operating funds for 10 direct-lease centers, although city records indicated $939,813 in annual rents would still have to be paid.

Day-care proponents plan a protest march with school parents next Tuesday, starting at City Hall at 10 A.M. and going to the Agency for Child Development at 240 Church Street and the State Emergency Financial Control Board at 1350 Avenue of the Americas. District Council 1707, Community and Social Agency Employees, is sponsoring a rally next Friday in front of City Hall.

Resort Tax Revenue Down

ATLANTIC CITY, June 3 (AP)—Luxury tax collections in this resort for April were down $24,858 from the same month last year, officials reported. Revenue and Finance Commissioner Horace Bryant said yesterday that only $191,881 was collected on the room rental tax during the month.

EV HEHN SAYS:

ANCHOR IN 'PORT'!

SWIM

Two town parks put two beaches, an olympic size public pool, tennis and miniature golf within minutes of any house in Port Washington. Enjoy them from this moderately priced "best buy" 3 bedroom, 1½ bath centrally located colonial home. $56,500

BOAT

"Port's" famous town dock plus several private marinas give access directly to picturesque Manhasset Bay. This 2 family home on Manhasset Isle is right in the heart of the waterfront area. $64,800

GOLF

"Port" is surrounded by 3 famous country clubs. In addition, a public town course is less than 10 miles away. Walk to Plandome Country Club and train station from this luxurious 5 bedroom, 2½ bath showplace colonial. $139,000

ENJOY

Private beach and mooring facilities are owned by several residential communities within Port Washington. This 6 bedroom, 5 bath custom built home in Beacon Hill boasts beach and tennis rights. $90,000

ITALIAN RENAISSANCE
The birthdate of this splendid residence was just after the turn of the century-a time when skilled artisans were in abundance and architects were not the least concerned with square footage allotments. The superb home is one of impressive dimensions both in size and number of rooms. Genuine parquet floors, fine wainscotting, detailed scalloped high ceilings, solid brass hardware & a huge central hall Tiffany skylight, one of the largest Tiffany pieces known.
An exceptional home property maintained and admirably suited for the art collector. On 4 acres in central Greenwich. Priced at a small fraction of today's replacement costs.

Representative Wayne L. Hays, Ohio Democrat, about to read his prepared statement on Capitol Hill yesterday.

MISS RAY'S DENIAL ON TAPING QUERIED

Several Friends Report She Recorded Congressmen

By LUCINDA FRANKS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—Although Elizabeth Ray has denied that she made secret tape recordings of alleged conversations and liaisons with members of Congress, several of her friends, including one former Representative, tell a different story.

Former Representative Kenneth J. Gray of Illinois, who employed Miss Ray as a clerk for a year and a half when she came to Washington in 1972, has said that Miss Ray once confronted him with a tape recording of a conversation with him that she had made surreptitiously. He did not elaborate on the content of the tape, but said "she bragged about taping me and everybody else."

A woman friend of Miss Ray's also said that, on one occasion within the last two years, she discovered a tape recorder hidden in Miss Ray's bedroom that was capable of picking up conversations elsewhere in her apartment.

Others Tell of Tapes

Other friends have said that the 33-year-old native of Asheville, N.C., had told them that she had taped exchanges with some prominent representatives and senators.

Although her lawyers deny she taped conversations with legislators while they were in her apartment, Seymour Feig, a New York lawyer who is handling movie and interview offers for her, said that "she may have taped her reminiscences of affairs with congressmen for her collaborator," Yvonne Dunleavy.

"She doesn't type," he added. "So maybe she put all of it in her tape recorder." Miss Dunleavy, who helped Fanny Foxe write her memoirs of her affair with Representative Wilbur D. Mills, Democrat of Arkansas, has ghostwritten Miss Ray's book that will soon be published as a paperback by Dell.

Yesterday, in a telephone interview with The New York Times, Miss Ray said, "I have no tapes and neither does anyone else. This is not the Nixon Administration."

'We Don't have Them'

Mr. Feig said, "if she [Miss Ray] made the tapes of her reminiscences, [she] may have given them to her collaborator. We don't have them. Her collaborator has lawyers. They may be holding them."

Miss Ray said publicly last week that Representative Wayne L. Hays, Democrat of Ohio, had given her a $14,000 public salary to be his mistress.

She has been given a promise of immunity and is expected to testify before a Federal grand jury hearing evidence on the possible misuse of Government funds in the Hays case. As the controversy arose from her job. Do you want her about whether Miss Ray had tape recordings, she was completing financial contracts with publications, contracts that, according to Mr. Feig, "will allow her to pay her rent."

Mr. Feig, standing guard outside Miss Ray's Arlington, Va., apartment where she has been secluded for several days, said that Miss Ray would be able to give only television interviews for the time being. "She has orders from New York," he said, "there's a prohibition against print media."

$20,000 Offer Reported

Mr. Feig said that deals were pending for exclusive rights to Miss Ray's story and that one publication, The National Enquirer, had offered her $20,000. He said that the television interviews were not being done for money.

"She's given out a lot of garbage for free," he said. "She's not looking to capitalize on this."

"She has no funds," he added. "She's not a typist, she's not a stenographer, she's not a professional hooker. She was fired to be a charge of the state?"

Miss Ray, in the telephone interview yesterday, said that she would not comment on her alleged Congressional liaisons. "I am not at liberty to," she said.

Mr. Feig said that his client was very upset by the "harassment" to which she has been subjected.

"She started to write a book a year ago, and now there are diminishing returns," he said. "She doesn't have a Marilyn Monroe syndrome, she felt it was her duty to speak out, and now she's done more than enough."

Miss Ray, however, has not appeared as distraught to some people as she has to Mr. Feig. One friend reported that she met Miss Ray, who made a few excursions outside her apartment last weekend, at a suburban Washington boutique. The friend described her as "bubbling over" with delight at the publicity she was receiving and the good fortune that seems to have befallen her.

temporary, because he would be exonerated.

"Chairman Hays's offer is not enough," said Representative James G. O'Hara, Democrat of Michigan.

He said that Mr. Hays must also step down from his chairmanship of the Administration Committee, because "it was in that capacity that the alleged abuse of public trust occurred, and public confidence in the operations of Congress will not be restored until he steps aside."

Similar remarks were reiterated by other members of the House, but more importantly by nearly all the members of the House Democratic leadership, who view Mr. Hays as a campaign liability.

Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts, the majority leader, John J. McFall of California, the majority whip, and Representative John Brademas of Indiana, the chief deputy whip, repeated their demands that Mr. Hays give up his two chief committee posts.

Mr. Brademas said that "although in our system, every person is innocent until proved guilty, the charges against Mr. Hays are such that until they have been resolved, he should not exercise either of these two important responsibilities."

If Mr. Hays is not voted out of the chairmanship of the Administration Committee next week, the Democratic leaders said, they will put the case to the House Democratic Caucus on June 16.

Leaders of the majority party in the House are saying privately that if the issue does come to a caucus vote, Mr. Hays will receive only 30 votes of support from the 287 Democrats in the chamber.

One of the main sources of discontent is the fact that several scores of Democratic representatives won narrow election victories in 1974, and they believe that the Hays-Ray affair has a guilt-by-association element that is dimming their chances of re-election.

Ethics Panel Acts

Meanwhile, the House ethics committee, which yesterday voted to investigate the charges against Mr. Hayes, adopted today four pages of technical procedures for the inquiry detailing who would be able to question witnesses an in what manner.

Representative John J. Flynt, the Georgia Democrat who heads the committee, said after a meeting today that its members heard reports that "less than five" other persons might have been on the Congressional payroll for something other than legitimate reasons.

Asked if the names of representatives who might have hired these persons had been brought up, Mr. Flynt said, "I don't think so."

Without saying so, he left the impression that both Mr. Hays and Miss Ray would be questioned either by members of the committee or by its staff aides.

Former Representative Kenneth J. Gray, Democrat of Illinois, who has acknowledged having hired Miss Ray as a receptionist several years ago, said that he would voluntarily appear before the ethics panel.

Mr. Flynt said that the questioning of potential witnesses had already started, but he declined to identify any of them by name.

In addition to the Congressional inquiry, a Federal grand jury is looking into the possible misuse of Federal funds in connection with Miss Ray's employment on the staff of the House Administration Committee.

Republican representatives, who have kept relatively quiet as the episode has unraveled, began a movement today to change the House rules so no one member could again accumulate as much power as Mr. Hays has.

Representative Robert H. Michel of Illinois, the Republican whip, introduced a resolution that would return to the full House the authority to vote staff salaries and other perquisites, such as allowance for postage, telephone and other items.

In 1971, the House voted to place such power in the House Administrative Committee, thus absolving most of the representatives of potential charges that they had raised their expense allowances. The vote, however, also gave Mr. Hays added power.

Representative Robert E. Bauman, Republican of Maryland, tried last year to overturn the 1971 vote, but was defeated 232 to 148, with the Democrats overwhelmingly voting against him. He said that he would make another attempt this year.

"All of us should go on record when we want to vote for salaries and expenses, and we shouldn't let the House Administration Committee and its chairman do it, no matter who he is," he said today. He added that he would bring the issue up in several weeks when the House votes on its legislative appropriations bill.

There were additional proposals by both Democrats and Republicans for changes in the operation of the House. These included ousting all the members of the ethics committee on the ground that they have done little to enforce the rules of Congressional conduct; setting up a new ethics committee composed of people who are not members of Congress, and amending the Constitution to limit the term of service of representatives to 20 years and of senators to 18.

The three ideas generated little interest among the members.

Interest was centered this morning on what Mr. Hayes would do. He has reportedly been attempting to bargain with the Democratic leadership to have his choices for temporary chairmen of his committees accepted.

He reportedly wants Representative Thomas E. Morgan, Democrat of Pennsylvania, named as chairman of the campaign committee, and Representative John H. Dent, also a Pennsylvania Democrat, named as temporary chairman of the Administration Committee.

But Mr. Dent is outranked in seniority on the Administration Committee by Representative Frank Thompson Jr., a New Jersey Democrat who is a bitter enemy of Mr. Hay's. The negotiations are expected to continue next week.

Mr. Hays read his five-paragraph statement in the hearing room of the House International Relations Committee before an audience composed of his wife, of six weeks, several friends, 67 radio and television newsmen and technicians and two newspaper reporters.

Staff aides of Mr. Hays tried to bar newspaper reporters from the room and were generally successful.

Carol Clawson, a press aide on the staff of the Administration Committee, arranged a deal with the broadcasters under which they agreed not to put questions to Mr. Hays. Newspaper reporters refused to accept this.

After reading Mr. Hay's prepared statement, one broadcaster asked: "Mr. Chairman, if the majority of the House membership wants you to step down from the Administration Committee, will you?"

Mr. Hays left hurriedly without answering.

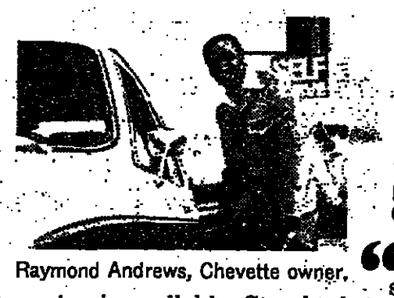
Jane Saito, Chevette owner.

"It does everything they said it would do. Roomy, good gas mileage, not a rough ride for a small car. It's all right!"



Raymond Andrews, Chevette owner.

Chevette power teams are combinations of economy and efficiency. The standard engine is a 1.4-litre 4-cylinder overhead cam with the smoothness and quietness of hydraulic valve lifters. A zippier 1.6-litre engine is available. Standard transmission is a fully synchronized 4-speed manual. Turbo Hydra-matic is available.

Reinhart Lesser, Chevette owner.

"It's very well appointed . . . It has a wonderful turning radius."

Chevette has one of the smallest turning circles of any car in the world. Just 30.2 feet. Something you'll appreciate as you park and move through city traffic. Steering is a responsive rack-and-pinion system.

"It's a lot quieter than I thought it would be."

James Nash, Chevette owner.

Chevette shields you from outside road noise with acoustic insulators in its lower dash, front floor, rear wheelhousings and rear quarter. Additional spray-on sound deadeners cover all the wheelwells, door insides and other critical areas. The available Custom Interior gives you even more insulation.

Chevette is built to keep people who are happy with it, happy for a long time to come. 17 different anti-corrosion methods are used in the building of its body: expensive epoxy paint, a wax base spray underneath, galvanized metals, oil base coatings, zinc-rich primers, inner fender liners and other things to help every Chevette fight rust and wear.

Loft Jazz Goes on a Three-Day Toot

By ROBERT PALMER

THE SHORTEST and least expensive jazz festival of the season—and one of the most action-packed—begins tonight at four performing lofts in downtown Manhattan.

The New York Loft Jazz Celebration, as it's being called, runs from 8 this evening until Sunday. There will be 22 performances by regular groups and 2 open jam sessions—63 hours of music in all.

It is doubtful that the schedule, which calls for two concerts at 6 in the morning and two "high noon bagel brunches," would ever have been conceived, much less implemented, outside the adventurous NoHo and SoHo areas, whose Mason-Dixon line is Houston Street. Fortunately, most of the performances will take place at more conventional hours, and the admission price is eminently reasonable. Single events are $3, and a $10 ticket, good for any and all scheduled performances, can be purchased at the participating lofts. It's first-come first-seated, however.

The celebration, which is the result of an alliance of musicians known and unknown, mainstream and avant-garde, is an important sign that New York's loft jazz subculture is maturing.

Lofts—the term is loosely applied these days and often refers to first-floor performing spaces or basements, as well as to converted factory and industrial-storage facilities—have been the scene of important jazz developments since the early 1960's. When there were fewer jazz clubs and coffeehouses than today and jazz concerts were even riskier propositions, lofts were the only places many uncompromising, progressive musicians could perform. Most loft sessions were musicians-only events, but sometimes the public was invited, and sometimes admission was charged.

More organized loft operations, involving regular performance schedules and local advertising, developed during the late '60's, when concerts and record companies organized and run by musicians also began to proliferate. At first these activities were seen by the musicians as alternatives to the world of major record companies, established concert promoters and jazz clubs, but many players now see them as supplements. In fact, some of the musicians participating in the celebration are associated with major record labels. Dave Liebman, the saxophonist, and his band, Lookout Farm, performing in the Loft Jazz Celebration on Sunday evening, record for the A. & M. Records Horizon label, one of the most distinctive mass-distributed jazz lines.

And Anthony Braxton, who records for Arista, and Sam Rivers, who is on ABC/Impulse, are participating in a summer festival concert series next month at Studio Rivbea, a first-floor performing space at 24 Bond Street. Mr. Rivers, who runs Rivbea with his wife, Bea, often presents other jazzmen who record for major labels. He recently ended a spring festival concert series and will be

CELEBRITY SNAPS

The International Center of Photography, one of New York's newer museums, is in a handsome building, 1130 Fifth Avenue, at 94th Street (860-1777), and it has a show, through this weekend, of picture-snapping in a name-dropping vein. The exhibition, "Moonlighting Stars," consists of photographs taken by 24 well-known public figures who have selected their best efforts. Among them, Vice President Rockefeller ("My Horse in Venezuela" and shots of Japan and Central Africa); Jerome Robbins (six pictures, including one of Saul Steinberg), Susan Ford (shot of former Justice William O. Douglas) and Justice Douglas (a mountain, what else?). Open, 11 A.M. to 5 P.M. daily; show ends Sunday. Admission by contribution; $1 suggested for adults.

BOTANIC GARDEN

Roses are red, Brooklyn is near, it's all close by, why not go there? Five thousand rose bushes (900 varieties, 50 different blends of colors) have all burst forth in the Cranford Memorial Rose Garden of the Brooklyn Botanic Garden, 1080 Washington Avenue, Brooklyn (622-1433), and the rose garden opens for the season today; 8 A.M. to 6 P.M., Tuesdays through Fridays; 10 A.M. to 6 P.M., Saturdays and Sundays. Admission is free.

WESTBETH SHOW

Westbeth is an unusual Manhattan community, a large dwelling complex for artists on the Hudson River between Bethune and Bank Streets. It is the one housing project where the art galleries (four of them) may be in greater demand than the laundry rooms. Today, from 1 to 6 P.M., the Westbeth Co-op Gallery, 155 Bank Street, opens its annual summer exhibition. The show displays paintings, sculptures, photographs and tapestries made by seven Westbeth artists. Open weekends 2 to 6 P.M., Fridays 5 to 8 P.M. through July 18. Information: 989-0232, 242-1794. Admission is free.

BOONTON FANFAIR

Boonton Township is a small New Jersey community only 35 miles from Broadway. Boonton has its own little show-biz fling today, with something called FanFair, a country fair featuring a watermelon-eating contest, arts and crafts, sky divers, bagpipers, barbershop quartets and square-dancers. Food, by local experts, includes foreign and domestic varieties, preserves and relishes. It's a benefit for Riverside Hospital, opens at 9:30 A.M., and has fireworks at 9 P.M. In tents, rain or shine. Admission: 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for youngsters; under-6's free. At Aircraft Radio Field, Rockaway Valley Road, Boonton Township, off Interstate 287, north of Interstate 80 West. Information: (201) 334-5000.

CHUMLEY'S IN VERSE

Chumley's is a Greenwich Village landmark, a restaurant of charm abutting a courtyard of charm all on a quiet intersection of charm, near Bedford and Barrow Streets. Years ago, Chumley's, which has no identifying sign, was even quieter — if memory serves—with the silence broken only by the moving of chess pieces and the puffing of pipe smokers. It's noisier now, but at 2 P.M. on some Saturday, like today, the quiet returns as the customers seal their lips and open their ears to poetry readings. Today the poets are Joan Larkin and Mimi Albert. At Chumley's tables, you pay a $2 minimum, which you may consume in food or drink. You can stand at the bar for no charge (but, really, it's more polite to buy something).

SILVERMINE ART SHOW

The Silvermine Guild of Artists is a venerable (54 years old) artists' cooperative at 1037 Silvermine Road, New Canaan, Conn. (203) 966-5617. Today the guild is opening its 27th New England exhibition of painting and sculpture (through July 3), a yearly open competition that occupies four galleries on the spacious Silvermine property, six wooded acres, including a pond and gardens, where you can stroll and enjoy natural and human art. Also weaving and ceramics studio on view. Admission is free. Open daily, 12:30 to 5 P.M. Merritt Parkway to Exit 38 (from the east, Exit 39 or 40). Or New England Thruway, Exit 15; thence to Route 123 and right on Silvermine Avenue.

London's 'Neil Simon,' Due Here, Is a New Boy in Town—At 89

THE hottest playwright in London is Ben Travers, who has two comedies going for him now, with another comedy opening at the Savoy next month. The two on the boards now are "Plunder" and "The Bed Before Yesterday," and the one opening next month is "Banana Ridge." This means that Mr. Travers is having a season on the West End similar to the ones Neil Simon once had on Broadway. Further comparisons, however, are hard to make. Mr. Travers is 89 years old, and he has never been on Broadway.

"Plunder" was first done in 1928, and "Banana Ridge" in 1938, which was not long before Mr. Travers stopped writing. He started again a little while ago, and wrote "The Bed Before Yesterday," which opened last October with Joan Plowright in the lead. She plays a widow, who, in her middle age, discovers sex. Now, "The Bed Before Yesterday" will come to Broadway, possibly with Carol Channing as the widow.

Arthur Cantor, who is an old Broadway man, as well as the managing director of H. W. Tennent Ltd., the London theatrical concern, is negotiating with Miss Channing. Mr. Cantor wants to put "Bed" on the road in October, and then bring it into New York around Christmas. If "Banana Ridge," which will star Robert Morley, is a hit, Mr. Cantor may bring that over, too. Mr. Travers could conceivably then celebrate his 90th birthday with two shows on Broadway.

Boris Aronson does not remember how many shows he has designed sets for, although he thinks it is at least 125, of which the most recent one, of course, is "Pacific Overtures." He won a Tony for "Pacific Overtures." He won Tonys for five shows before that. He is a professional. He is also a Russian, having come here from Kiev in 1923, and like other Russians who have come here and involved themselves in our cultural life (George Balanchine, for one; Vernon Duke, for another) he thinks deeply about America and his art. This is Mr. Aronson, thinking out loud:

"The most fantastic thing happened to me when I did 'Company.' It was about what life in a big city does to marriage, and when I walked around downtown it looked to me as if New York was illustrating my sets. New York is undiscovered territory. It has not found a way to be presented. It has no tradition. In Versailles, you bow. In New York, you dodge taxis. Paris is a picture postcard. New York . . . New York is always being rebuilt.

"I am very much interested now to do contemporary life, but there are not enough plays. The theater goes backward and becomes repetitious. There is so much being done that is simple nostalgia, not even very good. This is too bad. It is exciting today. All you do is read a newspaper. Fantastic! Grotesque! All I read now is about the love affairs of Presidents. Grotesque! But I don't see these things presented. All we do is review the past."

Mr. Aronson paused, although his accent hung in the air.

"Theater is a collective, but lately it has been spending fantastic amounts of money on things that are not so good. Now I don't do so many shows, but I've done eight shows with Hal Prince, and this has been the high spot of my career. You know, I haven't the slightest idea of how I design a show. But I guarantee that when I find a system, when I find out how I do it, I quit. If I find a system, then it means I am becoming an institution. I guarantee that then I quit.

Boris Aronson, designer of "Pacific Overtures"

Somewhere or other in New York there is always a "Hamlet" being done, or getting ready to be done, or at least being thought about. The newest "Hamlet" will be an Equity approved showcase put on by The Really Portable Hamlet Company at Stage One at Stage 73 on East 73d Street. It will run from June 10 to 12, June 16 to 19 and June 22 to 26, and is supposed to be different in this way: Hamlet will realize that Claudius is really his father.

"Vanities," which has been doing well at the Chelsea Theater, has just been sold to the American Broadcasting Company. A.B.C. wants to do it as a series, and so Jack Heifner, the author of "Vanities," will now write a pilot about the play's three Texas cheerleaders and what happens to them over the years. Mr. Heifner, who is 30 years old began writing only two years ago, and he seems to be writing mostly about women. "Vanities" is his second play. The first, "Casserole," was done at Playwrights Horizons. Mr. Heifner is a slight man with a mustache, from Corsicana, Tex., which calls itself "the fruitcake capital of the world." Here is his description of the creative process:

"The first play was real hard, but I did the draft of 'Vanities' in a couple of days. When I three girls from Texas in mind. I just f Treatment,' about a nightclub singer. Sally Kellerman in mind. Next, I'm goin a disaster comedy, based on a Texas t Barbara Walters and all the media in t do a play about Luisa Casati, a rival Duse's lover away."

Licentious Lyrics Get A In First of Midnight Con

By RAYMOND ERICSON

Those with a taste for bawdy ballads, raunchy roundelays, salacious serenades, doubles-entendres or even an outré overture might look into a program at Alice Tully Hall tomorrow at midnight, the first of two late night concerts. There they can hear works of such a nature from the pens of highly respected and respectable composers of England's less staid eras. There will be more of the same from French and Italian composers, served up with program notes but no English subtitles. The performers were Ite Ensemble for Early Music and the Early Music Gleemen, and the concert will last one hour and five minutes, without intermission.

Some of the pieces to be offered include William Byrd's Prelude from "The Maidenhead" (from his music for virginals) Thomas Campian's "Harke al you ladies that do sleep," Tobias Hume's "Peter's Pleasure," Robert Jones's "Goe to bed, sweet muze" and Henry Purcell's "Pox on you for a fop."

The program is one of two midnight concerts being presented by George Cochran, an old hand at this kind of event. The second concert will take place in Alice Tully Hall a week from tomorrow when the music will be by Bach's sons—Wilhelm Friedemann, Johann Christian, and Carl Philipp Emanuel. Sneaking into the lineup will be P.D.Q. Bach, who was unfortunately discovered by one Peter Schickele. P.D.Q.'s contribution will be "Last Tango in Bayreuth," to be played by four lady bassoonists. Besides this quartet, the performers will be the Allison Instrumental Ensemble; Ingrid Dingfelder, flutist, and Gerald Ranck, harpsichordist.

Midnight Pioneer

Alexander Schneider, the well-known violinist, conductor and teacher, is generally thought to be the pioneer here in midnight concerts. He gave his first one at the Circle in the Square in 1952 under the auspices of Theodore Mann, the theatrical producer. He repeated the concert in 1953 and the following year inaugurated his annual Christmas Eve midnight programs in Carnegie Hall. These have become a famous holiday tradition, and they are always sold out.

The idea was picked up in 1965 by Jay K. Hoffman and George F. Schutz, two young impresarios, who sponsored what they called "Late, Late Concerts" in Philharmonic (now Avery Fisher) Hall. The concerts actually began at 11:30 P.M. and were subtitled "For the neglected night people of New York." The series had such distinguished artists as Karl Richter, organist-conductor; Jean-Pierre Rampal, flutist, and Paul Badura-Skoda and Joerg Demus, duo-pianists.

Comparable to Movies

Mr. Schutz, who is still active as a manager, said the other day that he and Mr. Hoffman had hoped to make the concerts comparable to movies, with low prices and no intermission. They had hoped to attract young couples on dates who wanted to extend their evening: If they had been to a late film and didn't want to go home yet, the concert would be the solution. It worked for about four or five years. Mr. Schutz said that they were in a constant panic before each concert, because they would have an advance sale of only 5 percent. The rest of the audience, which usually reached 75 percent of capacity, always came at the last minute.

Even Calvin Hampton, organist of the Calvary Episcopal Church at 21st Street and Park Avenue South, found that midnight recitals provided a good draw. He often p works of whose hy ally entra

...lso for another ...or nowadays ...ly inroads into ...let repertory, ...eading roles as the Firebird. That is the long-legged and elegant Colleen Neary, who can be as sassy in "Western Symphony" as she is sweetly classical in "Piano Concerto No. 2."

As one might expect from an institution such as the City Ballet a number of the dancers are in dancing families. They include Francis and Paul Sackett, who are dancing brothers, Mr. D'Amboise's son Christopher, who is at the School at American Ballet, and Colleen Neary, who is the sister of Patricia Neary, a former company ballerina who is now director of ballet at the Geneva Opera House in Switzerland.

The Danes are also full of interrelated groups. For example Vivi Flindt is married to the company's artistic director, Flemming Flindt. A pretty woman who achieved quite a sensation even in Copenhagen earlier this year by appearing stark naked in a revue called "Gorgeous Bitch," she is typically Danish, not merely in looks, but also in the range of her dramatic expression. In Denmark she excells in roles such as the heroine in "Miss Julie," and the temptress in Mr. Flindt's "The Miraculous Mandarin," but she also dances in the classic Bournonville repertory.

So does the rather younger Sorella Englund, who has been seen in the title-role of "La Sylphide" and is regarded as one of Denmark's more promising dancers with a strong classical technique. She is a typical product of the Danish school.

One of the most distinguished of the Danish teachers, is Henning Kronstam, who nowdays restricts his appearances to mime. In some ways he can be compared with Donald MacLeary, now Ballet Master of the Royal Ballet in London, for he was a courtly prince in his dancing days. But Mr. Kronstam also enjoyed a remarkable talent for acting that is one of the hallmarks of the Danish style. In Bournonville's "Far From Denmark," as the young naval officer hero he scarcely had to dance a step, yet he was able to fill the stage with his presence.

A Classical Virtuoso

The same could be said of Niels Kehlet, but Mr. Kehlet is a great character and classical virtuoso dancer, and although his dancing is splendid in such ballets as "Etudes," he also excels as Mercutio in "Romeo and Juliet," and the paranoid Dancing Master in Flemming Flindt's "The Lesson."

His style, bounce, verve and good humor are both spectacular and yet charming, and he is technically probably one of the very strongest male dancers that Denmark — which is famous for its male dancers, as the City Ballet and Mr. Balanchine have discovered—has ever produced.

It would be difficult to imagine two more contrasted modern-dancers than the still moderately young Cliff Keuter, who has graduated to his own company after appearing with the Dance Theater Workshop and Paul Taylor, and Daniel Nagrin, who is now presumably one of the best veteran modern dancers.

Both of them, of course, are also choreographers. Mr. Kenter has something of the avant-gardist, absurdist manner of Louis Falco, whereas Mr. Nagrin is a dancer and choreographer of great power and strength whose style stems partly from that of the late Helen Tamiris, to whom he was once married.

So there they are, 10 dancers, who will stand out among the hundreds — ranging from the little children of the City Ballet and the Danes right through to the dance veterans — on New York's remarkable assortment of dance stages this weekend.

It is to Miss Welch's credit that the majority stayed to give her an ovation.

The Great Belmont Stakes

The classic event for three-year-olds.

Tomorrow at Belmont Park, Bold Forbes, winner of the Kentucky Derby, and his jockey Angel Cordero, take on one of racing's greatest challenges in the classic Belmont Stakes.

The big question is can they win in this demanding mile-and-a-half test. Speed alone won't win. It's going to take stamina and a great heart. Because in this final leg of racing's Triple Crown, it's a long way to the finish line. And the Belmont Stakes always attracts a field of top three-year-olds.

If you've never seen a great race in person, this is the one to start with!

And that's not all. Throughout the day, Belmont Park will continue its festival of live, big name music in the Backyard Bandstand, starting at 12:15.

Tito Puente... Celia Cruz... the Up With People group. All for the $2 grandstand admission.

Plus there's great food, such as fried chicken, corn-on-the-cob and even banana splits. Come early and make it a picnic in the lovely country setting of Belmont Park. It's all just a short ride from Midtown and there's plenty of parking.

So come out to Beautiful Belmont Park tomorrow for the Belmont Stakes. And on Sunday for more exciting Thoroughbred racing.

Gates open at 11. First race 1:30.

Special trains (LIRR) and buses can take you directly to the track. For information, call (212) 641-4700, ext. 306.

"Come up and see me sometime."

Come to Stratford, Connecticut.
Come to The American Shakespeare Theatre.
Come to The Stratford Experience.

It's all here. Waiting for you. In this, our 22nd Season, we offer the theatre of Shakespeare with As You Like It and The Winter's Tale. And, The Crucible, by Arthur Miller.

There's more. Much more. Our theatre is surrounded by The Stratford Experience. Scenic, restful, beautiful. Spend some time in our unique Costume Museum. Sightsee. Picnic outside under a shade tree or on the banks of the Housatonic River. Dine inside at a charming New England restaurant.

There's a whole day of theatre, tranquility, and discovery just a short drive from Manhattan. Come. Enjoy us. Soon.

West Side Book Browser

By JOHN LEONARD

THE UPPER East Side has singles bars. The Upper West Side has bookstores.

It is Saturday night upstairs at the New Yorker bookstore on West 89th Street, although it could just as well be Friday night on the ground floor of Radius, formerly the Book Gallery, at 240 West 72d Street or Sunday afternoon in Nine Ninety-Nine West on Broadway. She is pigtailed, wearing a "Made in U.S.A." sweatshirt. He is unpersuasively shaggy, as if the face were an ashtray. They don't know each other, but they will.

If she is looking at "Thus Spake Zarathustra," he will say: "According to Pasternak, Nietzsche's principal business was to be the transmitter of the bad taste of his period. Do you grok?" If, on the other hand, she is thumbing through a copy of "Fear and Trembling," he will say: "Kierkegaard once claimed that he would have been happier as a police spy; he had a decided talent for it. Outasight."

After an hour of this small change, together they will descend the preposterously steep and narrow staircase to the street. She asks whether he, like Camus, is a little repelled by the fantastic element in Kafka? Not at all. He wonders whether she would like to see his collection of Louis Seize commodes? You bet. The city seems suddenly a cathedral, into which they wander with a happy faith in what Cyril Connolly called "the Either, the Or and the Holy Both."

Well, this is not what bibliophiles mean by "browsing." If young people have glandular needs, why don't they go to a poetry mixer at the Y? Whatever happened to the museums, where strangers struck up conversations, comparing the early Chiricos with the later Rouaults, the late landscapes of van Gogh with Nerval in his madness? And concerts: It used to be easy to find some companionship at a concert, especially if they were playing Elizabeth Lutyens's Motet (Op. 27) with a bunch of Germans singing selected maxims from Wittgenstein's "Tractatus Logico-Philosophicus," and nobody knew why he or she was there to begin with.

But bookstores? They are already too small and crowded. People-browsing worsens it. One expects better of the West Side, where all the writers are supposed to live. Nonetheless, if you really intend to browse, rather than to cruise on the Upper West Side this weekend, start off early on a Saturday or a Sunday morning, before the mating games.

Begin, if you want coffee, at Radius, or, if you have children, with Eeyore's (230 West 82d Street). Eeyore's, which opens at 10:30 A.M., specializes in children's books. The man in charge not only knows every book he has in stock, but is also positively anxious to order for you what he doesn't have. On Sunday mornings at 11, there's a story hour, with reading aloud.

Continue uptown to Nine Ninety-Nine West (at 2345 Broadway; there's also an East Side store at 999 Madison Avenue). This is a standard, all-purpose New York bookstore, with the usual hard-cover best sellers, the usual table of remaindered books and a solid representation of paperbacks, sensibly categorized. What distinguishes Nine Ninety-Nine West is, again, helpful people who know their stock and are willing to order for you and reliable about letting you know when the book you've ordered comes in.

If, then, you've dawdled sufficiently, it might be 1 o'clock and the time when Murder Ink (271 West 87th Street) opens. Opening time depends on the whim of the owner, Dilys Winn. It is characterized by a cat and a clubby atmosphere. Murder Ink habitues band together during the winter to hear lectures by writers, former convicts, forensic pathologists and the like. They also go on camping trips, such as a coming charter tour of those parts of England associated with literary huggermugger. Many regulars appear to be writing murder mysteries of their own, and like to sit around comparing poisons.

Two more blocks bring you to the New Yorker, which in midafternoon is still a bookstore, not yet a singles bar. There are excellent selections of poetry and of literary criticism. There are also, upstairs, two chairs—an almost unheard-of nicety in Manhattan bookstores — and the names, addresses and telephone numbers of other stores are posted on a wall. The people are competent, but tend to get grouchy when the premises get crowded. Then, too, ordering is an imposition.

All five of these stores are, however, run by people who know and care about books, instead of by people who seem to think that bibliophilia is something the Supreme Court doesn't permit between consenting adults. There are other such stores elsewhere than the Upper West Side, for instance the Argosy (116 East 59th), which may be the best all-purpose bookstore in Manhattan; and the Metropolitan (on 23d Street, off Madison Avenue), full of surprises; the Gotham Book Mart (41 West 47th Street), without much room to move around in and rather high priced, and, of course, the Strand (at Broadway and 12th Street), which actually has hard-cover books more than six months old. Rizzoli's has deteriorated.

And, New York being a place that specializes in specializing, there are agreeable specialisms in addition to Eeyore's and Murder Ink. For comic books, there's the Supersnipe Comic Book Art Emporium (1617 Second Avenue at 84th Street); for feminist and related literature, Woman Books (255 West 92d Street); for movies, Cinemabilia Inc. (10 West 13th Street); for music, Schirmer's (4 East 49th Street); for European literature in the original, Adler's Foreign Books (162 Fifth Avenue at 21st Street); for Asian literature in the original and translation, Han Lin Oriental Book emporium (7 Eldridge Street); for black studies, the Afroamerican Book Center (536 West 145th Street); and, just to put some geist in your Zeit, the Flying Saucer News and Prosperity Clinic (359 West 45th).

Where Bibliomania Is Spoken

A few of the 376 bookstores in Manhattan—including some specialist shops—suitable for weekend browsing are listed below, with addresses and hours.

Afroamerican Book Center, 536 West 145th Street, at Broadway (234-3369). Today and tomorrow 10 A.M. to 7 P.M.

Old People Eating"—one of the artist's "black" paintings

Goyas, From Death to Desire, at Met

...tennial tribute ...y from Spain ...by Goya will ...arting Sunday ...7) at the Met...um of Art.

...representing ...ts of Goya's ...nclude two of ...famous: the ...ja" and the ...the paintings ...-century Span... with specula...ved to this day ...dentity of the (Was it really Alba?)

There are two portraits of men who aided Goya's career: the Emperor Charles III and Gaspar Melchor de Jovellanos, the artist's friend and patron. There also are two examples of the "black" paintings that preoccupied the painter in his old age, "Two Old People Eating," and "The Colossus," which raises the specter of a giant ogre; as well as two cartoons for tapestries, "The Wounded Mason" and "The Amateur Bullfight."

The artist, who was born in 1746 in a village near Saragossa, and died in 1828, has been hailed on this occasion by Thomas P. F. Hoving, the Metropolitan's director, as "a contemporary of our American Revolution, not only in time but in spirit as well, a creative genius who broke totally new ground and influenced generations to come."

The exhibition, chosen by Xavier de Salas, director of The Prado museum in Madrid, will be officially opened at the museum tomorrow (in a ceremony not open to the public) by Juan Carlos I and Queen Sofia of Spain. Their appearance in this country marks the first official visit here by any Spanish head of state.

The exhibition at the Met can be seen during regular museum hours: 10 A.M. to 4:45 P.M., Wednesday through Saturday; 11 A.M. to 4:45 P.M., Sunday, and 10 A.M. to 8:45 P.M., Tuesday.

Stage: 'Rebel Wo[men']

Of all the Civil War generals on the Union side, presumably Grant was the most successful, but surely Sherman, that ice-cold professional, that intellectual soldier, that passionless strategist, was the most interesting. That certainly seems to be the view of Thomas Babe, who in his play "Rebel Women," which opened last night at the Newman Theater of Joseph Papp's Public Theater complex in Lafayette Street, takes as his theme the impact of Sherman's army, and Sherman himself, on the women left in a commandeered mansion during Sherman's march to the sea following the sacking of Atlanta.

Last year Mr. Babe had his first play staged by Mr. Papp. Called "Kid Champion," it was the study of a pop star's rise and fall, and although nothing like entirely successful, it was obviously the work of a genuine playwright. "Rebel Women," which is different not just in subject matter, but also in tone and texture, amply confirms that original promise. The narrative is at times diffuse, but the character of Sherman is steel-etched in blood, and his depiction of a momentous sexual confrontation between Sherman and a Southern matron, four months pregnant, is nothing short of superb theater, perfect in its psychological motivation.

Mr. Babe's Sherman announces early on that "I have no passion for war" and it soon becomes evident that this iceberg of a general has really no passion for anything—except when he finally gives in to a woman, his passion becomes coldly unbridled.

Looking back, in the comfortable hindsight of history, the War Between the States—perhaps the first modern war?—seems a fascinating period of American history, and Mr. Babe makes the most of its tragic emotional complexity. He often writes in a kind of poetry mixed with the vernacular, which gives the play a very special air, a mixture of Southern magnolia scent and the smell of Yankee sweat.

Not that Mr. Babe's Southern ladies are wilting violets—he after all calls them rebel women—nor that the Union characters are entirely coarse. A carpetbagger merchant, for example, with cool manners and a Ph.D., a homosexual Harvard lawyer who is a temporary major on Sherman's staff, and Sherman himself, an intellectual who finished first of his class at West Point—these men were not uncouth. But the Yankees were tough and the Southerners had the inevitability of history against them.

The play has been very tautly staged, particularly

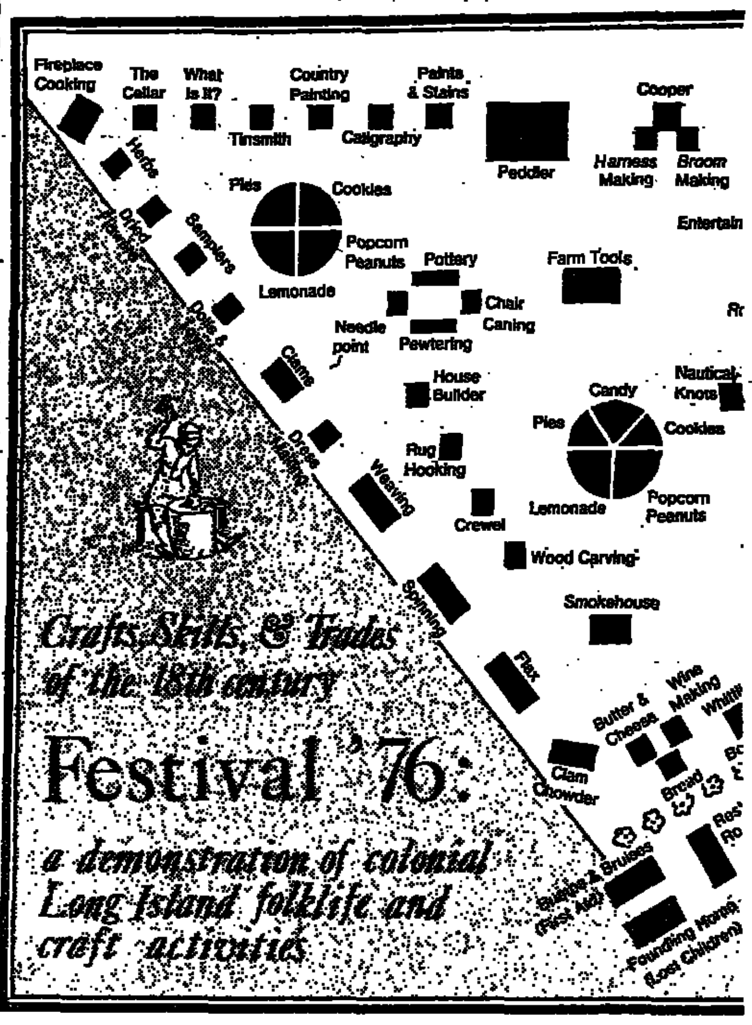
Stony Brook Relives



By MURIEL FISCHER

In a wide, grassy meadow called Forsythe Pasture, just beyond Hawkins Road in the village of Stony Brook, L.I., some 1,000 men, women and children—in costumes handmade and intricately detailed—will gather together tomorrow and Sunday to recreate a vivid picture of colonial Long Island at work, at home and at play.

Men in knee breeches, tunics and vests will be making bowls, brooms, shingles and ropes; also, blacksmithing, coopering, pewtering and whittling. Women in broom skirts, mobcaps and dresses plain or fancy will be baking bread, churning butter, tallowing candles and rendering soap; weaving, dyeing, spinning and stitching crewel, quilts, samplers and rugs.

Youngsters in 18th-century apparel will be assisting as apprentices, preparing materials for the master craftsmen, learning their trades.

And the small ones will be at play, with handmade dolls and toys—kites and hoops, marbles and tops; spinning, skipping, stilt walking and jumping rope, playing leapfrog, hopscotch, skittles and tag.

This is Festival '76, an earnest, endearing demonstration of the folk life and craft activities of Colonial Long Island, geared to salute the nation's Bicentennial celebration and to benefit the History Museum of the Museums at Stony Brook.

Tour Included

The two-day festival will be open 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. each day. The $2 admission ($1 for children 6 to 12 and senior citizens) covers parking, shuttle bus transportation from the parking lot or railroad station to the festival site and a bus tour of the museum complex, which includes a carriage house, an art museum, a museum store, a craft center, period buildings and a grist mill. At the mill, grain will be ground and "colonists" will be performing carpentry, woodworking and shingle making.

At the site itself, 42 crafts and trades will be demonstrated. And visitors can sample such 1776 fare as clam chowder, gingerbread cookies, strawberry-rhubarb pie and hot brick-oven bread spread with freshly churned butter.

For those with 1976 appetites, hot dogs and hamburgers, popcorn and peanuts, lemonade and soda will be available for purchase.

The crafts displayed will not be for sale, but a yankee peddler will be hawking brooms, baskets, bowls and reproduction wares.

Festival '76 is the fifth in a museum series that began in 1965. Families from the Stony Brook area have come together every two or three years to review past pageants, research the current one and canvas the community for old tools and new volunteers.

ost of the new s time of year deal to be de- ograms at the es — principally Street Cinema r, near West he Elgin (171 ue, near 19th Carnegie Hall eventh Avenue, treet) and the St. Marks (off) — should be carefully. The films are not ie best shape, old color films, in the theaters may be a bit creaky, but this is beside the point unless you go to the movies for the principal purpose of snoozing.

'Eve' and Berkeley

Today and tomorrow the Elgin is playing a double bill of Joseph Mankiewicz's "All About Eve" and Busby Berkeley's "The Gang's All Here." At this point I think I've seen the remarkably witty "All About Eve" enough to hold me for a while, but "The Gang's All Here" is a generally underrated, underseen Berkeley spectacular of color, extraordinary camerawork and pop artifacts named Alice Faye and Carmen Miranda. On Sunday and Monday the Elgin will offer Walter Lang's "There's No Business Like Show Business," which has a fine old Irving Berlin score and the spectacles of Ethel Merman playing mum to Johnny Ray and Marilyn Monroe supposedly head over heels in love with Donald O'Connor.

Heading this bill is the vastly more entertaining "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," directed by Howard Hawkes.

I remember that when it was announced that Marilyn Monroe would play the Carol Channing role in the film verson of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," it was thought to be another example of gross Hollywood miscasting. Instead it turned out to be an inspiration.

Anita Loos's Lorelei Lee was the quintessential Monroe role, and what the actress lacked as a singer and dancer, she more than recouped with her comic presence, which Mr. Hawkes used flawlessly here. The Jule Styne-Leo Robin score, which was often patronized in its own time, has outlasted a lot of other, much fancier, less witty works of the era.

Bogdanovich and Altman

The Carnegie Hall Cinema's combination tomorrow is Peter Bogdanovich's "The Last Picture Show" with Robert Altman's "McCabe and Mrs. Miller," which most people must have seen but which you might want to catch if you've been living the last decade in the Antarctic. On Sunday the theater is reviving Paul Czinner's "Der Rosenkavalier" (1962), a filmed record of the Rudolf Hartmann Salzburg Festival production with Elisabeth Schwarzkopf as the Marschallin, conducted by Herbert von Karajan. This is something I haven't seen and mean to get to, one way or another, this weekend.

If you're in the mood for camp or for trivia, or if you are a Howard Hughes nut, you might want to go to "The Outlaw," the Billy the Kid legend as seen by Mr. Hughes, who not only directed the film but also designed Jane Russell's cantilevered bra. The latter, among other things, so scandalized the people of the Legion of Decency and the Production Code in 1943 that they did what they could do to suppress the film. Footnote to history: Howard Hawkes worked on "The Outlaw" for 10 days, but you'd never know it.

"The Outlaw" will be at the Theater 80 St. Marks today and tomorrow with a forgettable John Wayne western, "The Angel and The Badman."

Bette Davis Bill

On Sunday and Monday the theater will be offering a crash course for people wanting to brush up on their Bette Davis impersonations; a double bill of the terrible "Payment on Demand" (1951) made a year after the classic "All About Eve," and the original "Of Human Bondage" (1934), which is a far from great film though the Davis performance is interesting, not because it's so accomplished but because it demonstrates how much she grew as an actress in later years. The movie is actually pretty tacky.

In addition to its regular programs of revivals, the Bleecker Street is also offering a Louis Malle retrospective on Tuesdays this month. Next Tuesday's bill consists of "The Thief of Paris," which I haven't seen, and "The Fire Within" (1964), a bleak but extraordinarily affecting study of a man systematically and without fuss going about the business of his own suicide.

The Carnegie Hall Cinema is paying its respects to John Ford on Wednesdays, offering the seldom seen "Up the River" (1930), which introduced Spencer Tracy and Humphrey Bogart, and "The Whole Town's Talking" (1935) next week.

In the future at the Carnegie Hall Cinema: Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra" and "Major Barbara" on June 13, and two early Technicolor works by Rouben Mamoulian, "Blood and Sand" (1941) and "Becky Sharp" (1935). They say the print of "Blood and Sand" is brand new.

The Farce of Farces

None of these films, though, is likely to provide the pleasure of "Twentieth Century," which came to be the film by which all subsequent Hollywood farces (including Mr. Hawkes's own "Bringing Up Baby" and "His Girl Friday") were to be measured.

Never, I think, has mania been so boisterously and humanely ridiculed as it is in this film, for which the Hecht-MacArthur stage play (in turn based on a Bruce Milholland play) was simply a trailer. Some of the funniest material in the film—the prologue that tells how the egocentric Broadway producer and his former star came to be on the famous Chicago to New York train—is not in the original Hecht-MacArthur play. In this case, the film is miles ahead of the play, which it was not fashionable to admit in 1934.

Though "Twentieth Century" is very much about the theater and theatrical personalities of is own day, its accuracy and vitality remain undiminished, not only because the authors knew what they were writing about and wrote some of their most lyrical lines of abuse and sarcasm ("He won't kill himself—it would please too many people"), but also because both star performances remain unique.

Opulent Prospects

Neither Barrymore nor Lombard, I think, ever had a finer single moment on film than the sequence in which Oscar and Lilly are sparring about her possible return from Hollywood to the Broadway theater in his production of the Passion Play, in which she'd play Mary Magdalen. Oscar is drawing a vivid word picture of the magnificence of the production. "One hundred camels," says Oscar, whom Lilly knows to be flat broke. "Real sand, imported from the Holy Land. Lilly's eyes pop for a second or two, then she starts to giggle nastily.

"I'll make you immortal," says Oscar.

Lilly is practical. "I've decided to stay mortal," she says, "with a responsible management."

They live furiously—and happily—ever after.

Beautiful Science Fiction
—The New York Times

There are quite a few science-fiction movies scheduled to come out in the next year or so. We shall be lucky if even one or two are as absorbing and as beautiful as 'The Man Who Fell To Earth.' A first-rate achievement. —Richard Eder, The New York Times

An experience much like '2001: A Space Odyssey'. —Jerry Oster, New York Daily News

Fascinating to watch, filmed with hypnotic effect, the film is visually arresting. It rivets your attention. —William Wolf, Cue

It's an experience, mystic and mysterious that bestirs the brain much as did 'A Clockwork Orange'. —Robert Salmaggi, WINS Radio

Tremendous style, visually very, very striking. David Bowie's casting is inspired, a sort of Howard Hughes from Mars. Candy Clark is absolutely superb. —Walter Spencer, WOR Radio

It stimulates the imagination. God knows this is rare. —Lynn Minton, Critic, McCall's Magazine

This is an attention-holding space thriller and love story. Violent, sexy and imaginative, it is an impressive example of masterly direction and editing. Candy Clark could earn another Oscar nomination. —Norma McLain Stoop, After Dark

First-rate, superior, grounded in the things that make life meaningful: love, family connections and the instinct for survival. —Jim D'Anna, WRVR Radio

A complex, thoroughly fascinating film certain to remain in your mind for a long time. —Aaron Schindler, Family Circle

Nicolas Roeg is a master filmmaker. In 'The Man Who Fell To Earth' his use of David Bowie is so dazzling that you believe Bowie to be an extraordinary actor and of course Bowie is. —Leo Lerman, Vogue

Eye-filling, mind-boggling, one of the most interesting science-fiction films of recent years. —Judith Crist, Saturday Review

HAWMPS Opened last week in Los Angeles...

"HAWMPS is sheer amiability! A funny picture, its humor very broad but unfailingly good-natured. Joe Camp has a feel for what is cinematic and a genuine affection for his actors. James Hampton attains star status."

Kevin Thomas
L. A. Times

"HAWMPS is extra-compensating, imaginative entertainment and its sight gags, appearing almost throw-away, are continually fresh."

Ray Loynd
L. A. Herald Examiner

"HAWMPS is a whimsical, slapstick funny comedy with dazzling cinematography of the Old West . . . a family entertainment with real excitement. Bonus — a documentary on the life of the magical dog Benji that's worth the price of admission."

Liz Smith
Cosmopolitan

"HAWMPS stands like the veritable LAWRENCE OF ARABIA on today's family film scene. A good-natured farce for young and old alike... alternately spritely, exciting and harrowing. Its heart and its humps are in the proper place."

Dave Sterrit

Carl Foreman, Living On An Earthquake, Writes Catastrophe Epic

NOT far from the San Andreas Fault, where the earth bulges up inch by inch and scientists talk insistently about a coming earthquake, Carl Foreman is typing up his initial notes for "The Day the World Ended."

It is the next disaster epic to be produced by Irwin Allen ("Poseidon Adventure" and "Towering Inferno"). This one is about the destruction of an island by a volcanic eruption.

Mr. Foreman, back in California after more than 20 years in Britain—he went there after refusing to talk about anyone but himself to the House Un-American Activities Committee—is not entirely comfortable at finding himself the screenwriter for somebody else's movie.

He was a screenwriter once, and a fine one: "Home of the Brave," "Champion," "High Noon" and others. Then his career was smashed, and when he recovered it in London, it was as a producer, with more muscle, more prestige.

Why is he working for Mr. Allen?

Though Mr. Foreman's "Guns of Navarone" was a big epic, it was a literate epic. Mr. Allen's epics, though sometimes exciting, are not.

The first answer was that he didn't have much else to do this summer. Two film projects of his own are temporarily "in hiatus."

"Then Irwin came along and took me up to the top of the mountain," Mr. Foreman said. "He offered me more money than I'd ever heard of before."

Mr. Foreman went on to say that he admired Mr. Allen's flair and bigness. He thought the two of them would work well together, each making compromises; although Warner Brothers was insistent, he said, that he produce "recognizable Irwin Allen characters, as established in 'Poseidon' and 'Towering Inferno.'"

"How do I justify this to myself?" It was his question. His answer: the San Andreas Fault.

"Everybody is reading about the earth bulging, right at their breakfast table. Nobody's leaving. Maybe they'll take out more earthquake insurance.

"We all live on the edge of an earthquake: material, emotional or whatever. I feel there's a valid theme here, and that's the way I intend to write it."

With a certain corporate gingerliness—not much promotion, for instance—Columbia Pictures is unleashing a film attack upon the nuclear family. The nuclear family has been through a lot of attacks, but this one is carried out with something approaching a nuclear weapon.

The film, "The Last Woman," is opening here early next week. It is by Marco Ferreri, an Italian who makes French films with a Spanish screenwriter and who manages to startle, outrage and sometimes to please.

Mr. Ferreri has been setting off explosive charges for years, though some of them left only little holes. Among his previous films are one about a man who marries an old woman to inherit her apartment, another about an old man who poisons his family to buy a wheelchair, a cowboy film set in Paris and "La Grande Bouffe," which tells of four friends who eat themselves to death.

"The Last Woman" is about the disintegration of a young man and woman who live together in a sleek, impersonal apartment development beside a garishly modern French factory. Nothing comes or goes through the windows or the door; they are a modular unit of society and totally cut off from it.

It is full of sex, pain and ludicrousness; it has what is reported to be a spectacular performance by Gérard Depardieu; and it has for an ending an act of protest so startling and grotesque that to describe it would spoil either the spectator's movie or the reader's breakfast.

Why bother with the real if you can use the counterfeit? David Wolper hopes to make some real money out of a counterfeit film life of the late Howard R. Hughes. It is based on the manuscript that Clifford Irving attempted to pass off as the tycoon's genuine memoirs.

After his spell in jail, Mr. Irving is reportedly planning to publish the manuscript under the title of "The Untrue Biography of Howard Hughes." This seems to rely on the same quirk of consumer psychology that makes cigarette manufacturers spend money to advertise—courtesy of the Surgeon General—that their product will make you sick.

Modern Opens Summergarden for Weekend Evenings

By ALLEN HUGHES

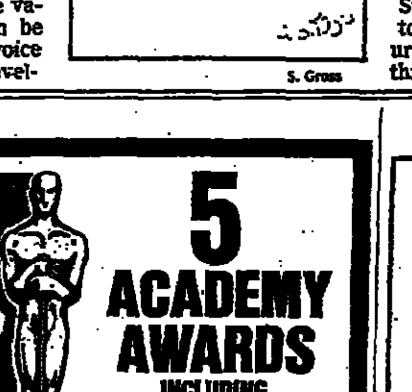
At six o'clock this evening, the Sculpture Garden gate in the East 54th Street wall of the Museum of Modern Art will be opened, and for thousands of visitors the 1976 Summergarden experience will begin. As those who have become familiar with it over the last five years are aware, the Summergarden offers a varied array of free, short and informal concerts of experimental music, recitals of works by living American composers, country music or jazz at 8 every Friday and Saturday through the middle of September.

The sculpture, plantings and pools of the garden remain more or less constant throughout the season, but the transition from the late afternoon sun to the nighttime illumination of statues, trees and surrounding buildings is never quite the same on two successive evenings, and the added lure of the concerts attracted 60,000 visitors last year.

This year, the June concerts are being devoted to experimental music. The performers tonight and tomorrow night will be Kirk Nurock and the Natural Sound Workshop. Mr. Nurock is a composer who has been exploring for some time the varieties of sound that can be made from the human voice and body, and he has developed a system of notation for these sounds. He and his group use neither instruments nor amplification in their performances.

Their program this weekend consists of two works—"Track," which will be given its premiere, and "Audience Oratorio" (Part II). "Track" is a study in the ways that physical movements affect vocal sounds. Accents, for example, can be created within a sustained tone by exaggerated jumping in place, and unisons are interrupted by the impact of bodies colliding chest-to-chest. Although the action of "Track" may suggest that of a track meet, the staging was composed for musical value rather than for theatrical effect.

As its title implies, "Audience Oratorio" invites audience participation. This will be voluntary, with the format to be explained at the time of performance.



S. Gross

Tom Johnson, a composer who also writes about contemporary music, will perform his "Secret Songs" in the concerts of June 11 and 12. There are 18 short pieces in this work, which he describes as "a venture into sound poetry and experimental voice technique." It is a nonverbal work for unaccompanied voice.

Computer music will be presented by Lori Spiegel on June 18 and 19, and Joan La Barbara's works for solo voice with electronic modification will be offered on June 25 and 26.

Keyboard music by living American composers will be featured in July with performances by Leonard Raver, organist (July 10 and 11) and three pianists—Vivien Taylor (July 16 and 17), Dwight Peltzer (July 23 and 24) and Rosemary Catanese (July 30 and 31).

The schedules are not complete for the remainder of the summer, but the month of August will be given over to country blues, bluegrass and ragtime, and September will be the jazz month.

A grant from Mobil enables the Museum of Modern Art to open the Sculpture Garden to the public at no cost, and the gate at 8 West 54th Street will be open from 6 to 10 P.M. every Friday, Saturday and Sunday evening through Sept. 19.

about two Florida high school football teams preparing for and playing their climactic season's game. It cuts back and forth between equivalent scenes; the hard, harsh final training days of each team, the pep rallies, the pregame locker-room exhortations, the game itself, the shattered dejection of the losers and the amazed, almost diffident exultation of the winners.

The focus is provided by the rival coaches—Haywood Fowle of Edison High, the incumbent title-holders, and Otis Mooney of Miami High, the underdog challengers. Fowle is harder, tighter; he uses a shade more ferocity in psyching his players up to their top destructive edge. Mooney is tough too, but he has thoughtful moments; he seems more human. And—one of those rewards documentary makers stumble into—both men look almost exactly alike.

Some will see it as a small war, and judge the fierceness, the drummed-up competitiveness, the cheerleaders' frenetic rites and their dopey prayers for victory ("because this means so much to Miami High — I think you know that — I think everybody knows that") as a small model of the war disease.

Others — like this writer — will find it moving. These young people are not standing aside; they are staking all their emotion and effort on a victory or a loss, and they catch the joy and the pain squarely. Either way, the film will bind the viewer to the anguish and excitement of game, players and coaches; and it stands as a classic of the documentary art.

go?" (The Cessna 172 can climb to 15,000 feet, but on this trip would stay around 1,000.) "How fast?" (120 miles an hour.) "How much does one cost? ($25,000.)

The boys climbed into the four-seater plane, which felt cramped to them, a bit like a sports car perched high off the ground.

Mr. Bull strapped them in, then started the aircraft, 510Q—known to the control tower as "five-one-zero-Quebec"—rolling toward the runway.

Once there, Mr. Bull took out his safety checklist and began to call out the items, some of which were more basic than one might expect.

"Doors all latched?" Mr. Bull asked himself aloud for the boys' sake. They were. "There yuh go," he said. Then he brought the plane's engine up to 1,700 revolutions per minute. The motor roared, the craft trembled and rocked.

Morgan Schweers was nervous. He shouted small talk. "Yep, sounds just like an airplane," he yelled over the roar. And he commented, "I knew it! This is the runway!"

Five - one - zero - Quebec sprinted down the asphalt. It lifted into the sky at 85 miles an hour, climbed to 1,200 feet over the flat-roof industrial buildings and headed toward the Hudson River.

The ride was smooth until the plane reached the Palisades, where air currents caught it and knocked it around. Mr. Bull turned the plane south down the river. Yankee Stadium was on the left, finally finished. Giants Stadium in the Hackensack Meadowlands was on the right, only nearly done. The river below was like a paved road that the plane followed.

New York City, a portrait in green, gray and tan, riveted the children's gaze. Soon Brooklyn and the Atlantic Ocean came into view, and Mr. Bull dipped the plane into a wide arc. He told the airport that five-one-zero-Quebec was coming home.

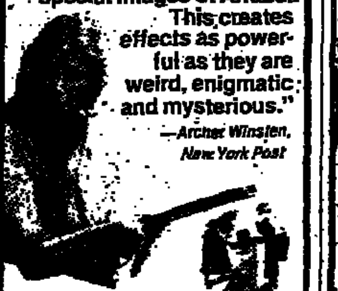
GUERNICA
A FILM BY ARRABAL
"'Guernica' has an unusual eloquence, flamboyant visual quality, plus those special images of Arrabal. This creates effects as powerful as they are weird, enigmatic and mysterious." —Archer Winsten, New York Post



starring MARIANGELA MELATO
in her most compelling and sensuous performance since "SWEPT AWAY"
WRITTEN AND DIRECTED BY FERNANDO ARRABAL

…tion of Robert E. Sherwood's "Small War on Murray Hill."

The walking tours are free, but a contribution of $2.50 is asked for by the Theater Off Park.

Greening of Neighborhood

In each of the last three years, the annual Murray Hill Committee Block Party had as its theme, "The Greening of Murray Hill," and with the proceeds of its annual festival it has planted 500 trees, put hoops around them and is now planting ivy amid the hoops. Its volunteers also change the flowers on the Park Avenue Mall between 34th and 39th Streets.

According to the committee's vice president, James W. Dennis, Jr., who is also chairman of the block party, "what we wanted to do was to have something for the Bicentennial, but we did not want to lose the spirit of our block parties, so we've combined them."

Local small merchants and the two department stores in the area which Mr. Dennis says are "our neighborhood stores," Lord & Taylor's and B. Altman's, have joined in as well. Altman's has given the committee its community service window at Madison Avenue and 35th Street for its displays, and Lord & Taylor will sponsor a Colonial fashion show. Other stores have donated food and merchandise to be sold and offered as prizes in the block party raffle, in which the first prize is a two-week British Airways London Show Tour for two, and the second, a color television set.

Most of the history will lie in the walking tour as well as in the dramatic retelling of Mary Lindley Murray's afternoon and evening in 1776 with Sir William Howe, the British general, that allowed an American force to retreat unmolested.

Mr. Marks says his tour will begin on the southeast corner of 35th Street and Park Avenue—the three other hourly tours will follow at 5 minute intervals—diagonally across the street from 16 Park Avenue, where a plaque indicates approximately the site of Belmont, the home of Robert Murray and his wife, Mary Lindley.

Divergence of Views

They were wealthy Quakers, he was a Loyalist, she supported the Revolution, and Murray Hill is named for them. In 1776 Mary Murray and her daughters—all beautiful women—are said to have entertained General Howe, covering the disorderly retreat of Silliman's Brigade and Knox's Artillery under the command of General Putnam and Aaron Burr.

Most stories say that Mary Murray entranced the general over lunch. Robert Sherwood made it an evening affair, one which drew this description from Walter Kerr:

". . . a thoroughly relaxed General Howe . . . sits sipping wine like the connoisseur he is, admiring from across the room the exceeding loveliness of a lady bent on trapping him for the night."

Afternoon lunch, or evening madeira, no matter, the Mary Murray Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution thought enough of the tale to put up a plaque for Mrs. Murray two blocks away in the Park Avenue Mall at 37th Street.

From 35th Street the tour will pass north along Park Avenue, where Mr. Marks says he will discourse on the origins of "Park Avenue," once an open area along the railroad sidings running from 32d to 42d Streets, and past the Hampton Robb House, a reddish stone building designed by Stanford White, which was at one time the home of the Advertising Club of New York, but which, according to Mr. Marks, is now vacant.

The tour will turn left, or west, at 36th Street and meander through the Morgan Library, then north to the Lutheran Church House at Madison Avenue and 37th Street, which had been J. Pierpont Morgan's home. Across the street is the De Lamar mansion, a Beaux Arts house designed in 1905 for a sea captain-stock broker, which for 50 years, from 1923, was the National Democratic Club. In 1973 it became the Consulate General of the Polish People's Republic.

The tour will then go east on 37th Street back to Park Avenue and then across to the southeast corner of Park Avenue and 38th Street to the Church of Our Savior, built in 1959 after a design by Paul C. Reilly. The building has the largest monolithic marble columns of any church in the city, according to Mr. Marks. On the way back south along Park Avenue the tour will stop at 37th Street to view the Mary Murray plaque, then return to 35th Street for the tour's conclusion.

The Community Church Gallery will be presenting a free slide show, from 1 to 5 P.M. devoted to the history of Murray Hill, from Mary Murray's time through 1847, when it abruptly ceased to be quiet farm land, and into modern times.

Murray Hill was one of the first communities to become aware that residential zoning ordinances were necessary if homes were not to become newly mechanized factories and business sites.

Back in the 1700's, no livery stables would be allowed nor slaughter houses, smithies or forges. No gunpowder could be manufactured, nor could glue, vitriol, ink or turpentine. Nor could there be museums, theaters or circuses. The neighborhood continued its hard line residential stand as late as 1914 when the Murray Hill Association was formed by J. Pierpont Morgan in an effort to block the building of apartment houses. It failed.

With the coming of Grand Central Terminal, hotels bloomed in the area, mingling with the brownstones, mansions, carriage houses and mews, armories and schools. Murray Hill is the home of the Union League Club and the Old Grolier Club. Within its generally defined borders of 34th to 42d Streets, and Madison Avenue to the East River stand buildings constructed under the influence of the Italian Renaissance, the Aztecs, the Victorians, the Romans and gothic builders as well.

Visitors are invited to wander among Murray Hill's streets and gaze, that is when they're not watching the chef from the area's newest hotel, the Kitano—which was converted from the old Murray Hill residential hotel at Park Avenue and 38th Street, by a Japanese syndicate—demonstrate Japanese cooking and disburse free samples. Or when they're not listening to the town criers roaming 35th Street, or taking their children to the puppet, magic and face-painting shows.

All funds will go toward keeping Murray Hill green—and clean—Mr. Dennis said.

Visitors boarding the New York Festival Barge at the South Street Seaport Museum yesterday hands of Hollanders and Palatinate Germans in the western part of the state. The war itself is represented in map, document and re-creation. One depiction is a wide mural of a Stamp Act protest at Bowling Green.

The show does not dwell on the personalities of the period because it concentrates on the personality of the period, but it does have a brief rundown on several prominent New Yorkers, including Tories. There is a reproduction of a letter sent by a spy; when a certain form is placed over it, as it is here, the words convey information on military deployments.

On Monday at 5 P.M., the barge makes its second port, at the 69th Street pier in Brooklyn. It will be there through Wednesday. The arrival will spark a number of landward events at Shore Park, Shore Road and 69th Street, next to the newly rebuilt pier, where the ferry to Staten Island used to dock.

At 7 P.M. on Monday, there will be a concert with the Ridge Chorale and a 10-piece orchestra. Tuesday and Wednesday, the barge will be open 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. Tuesday's events include a musical show at 2 P.M. by students of the Hyde School in Bath, Me. At 6 P.M., a group of Brooklyn poets will conduct a program, and at 7 the Brooklyn Philharmonia will perform, followed at 8 P.M. by a concert of the Bay Chamber Opera Company, with selections by soloists of the Brooklyn Lyric Opera Company.

Next Friday, Saturday and Sunday the barge will be across the Narrows in Staten Island, at the Cromwell Center recreational Pier 6 in Tompkinsville. It will be open 9 A.M. to 8 P.M., and the pier will be alive with a festival featuring weavers, spinners, leather workers, the Richmond Constellation Orchestra, the Off Center Theater, the Golden Attic Choir, the Staten Island Society Music Band and a turn-of-the-century bathing beauty contest. Call 447-7775 for schedule details.

The barge then moves northward, to Yonkers (the Kennedy Marina) on June 15 and 16, and to Newburgh, June 18 and 20. Upon its return to these waters in late September, it will again call at Brooklyn (Huron Street) and touch at the Bronx (Roberto Clemente State Park, on the Harlem River), Port Jefferson and Oyster Bay, L.I., Rye, the Flushing World's Fair Marina in Queens and, on Oct. 16, back to where it started, the South Street Seaport. End of cruise.

Weekend Events Shoreside

To celebrate the barge's arrival, the Seaport has scheduled a number of activities:

Friday

Noon to 2 P.M.—Calliopes Children, steel band, on stage.

Noon to 6 P.M.—Circus events: magician, puppets, Hoochie Koochie Dream Band, storyteller, clowns.

6:30 to 7:30 P.M.—Peter Assaill and Adrienne Belanger, folk singers.

7 to 8:30 P.M.—Alvin Ailey Repertory Company, dancers.

Saturday

10 A.M. to 12:30 P.M.—Storyteller, kite flying.

12:30 to 5 P.M.—Folk festival, Pinewoods Folk Music Club.

5 to 7 P.M.—Theater 47 presents an original Colonial drama, "Aaron Burr."

7 to 8:30 P.M.—Folk singing concert.

Sunday

10 to 11 A.M.—"The Tricentennial," original play presented by the Imaginary People Theater for Children (also at 2 P.M.).

11 A.M. to noon—Children' Workshop on the Future (also at 3 P.M.).

Noon to 2 P.M.—Smith Street Society in jazz-ragtime singalong.

2 to 4 P.M.—Latin dance exhibition, on Front Street.

3:30 to 5 P.M.—Sea chanteys.

5 to 6 P.M.—Orpheus Singers.

7 to 8 P.M.—Jazz concert, Billy Taylor and band.

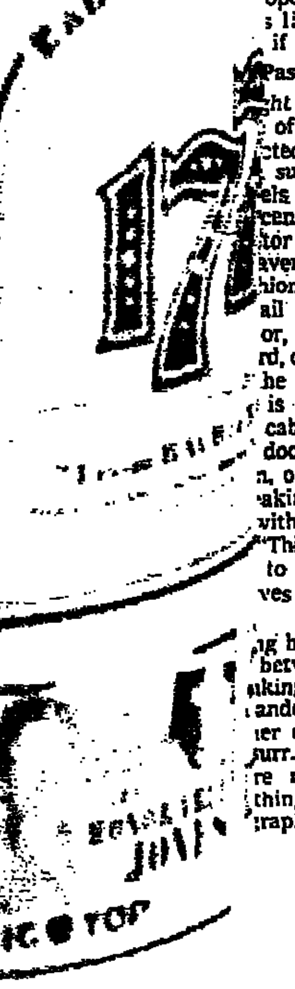
Carey, at Opening, Recalls Other '76

The big barge was greeted at South Street yesterday afternoon with dedicatory ceremonies, including speeches, music and other appropriate fanfare.

Governor Carey, dedicating the barge, recalled the grim days in 1776, when New York's request to the Continental Congress for a badly needed loan was turned down "as some sort of bailout."

Talking to 700 guests, the Governor went on to recount that "the solution New York came up with 200 years ago may also ring a bell." Tax anticipation notes were issued to pay off immediate debts. Later, New York postponed interest payments on bonds issued by the Royal Governor.

"I wonder how Felix Rohatyn would look in a three-cornered hat . . ."



"Sarah Miles has never been better! Her performance alone makes it worth seeing. Not only is she the most subtly erotic woman in the movies today but she very likely will get an Oscar nomination—I hope so. The camera work is exquisite with vivid erotic scenes, the most explicit ever involving major stars."—Kevin Sanders, WABC-TV

Architecture: Barragan at Mode[rn]

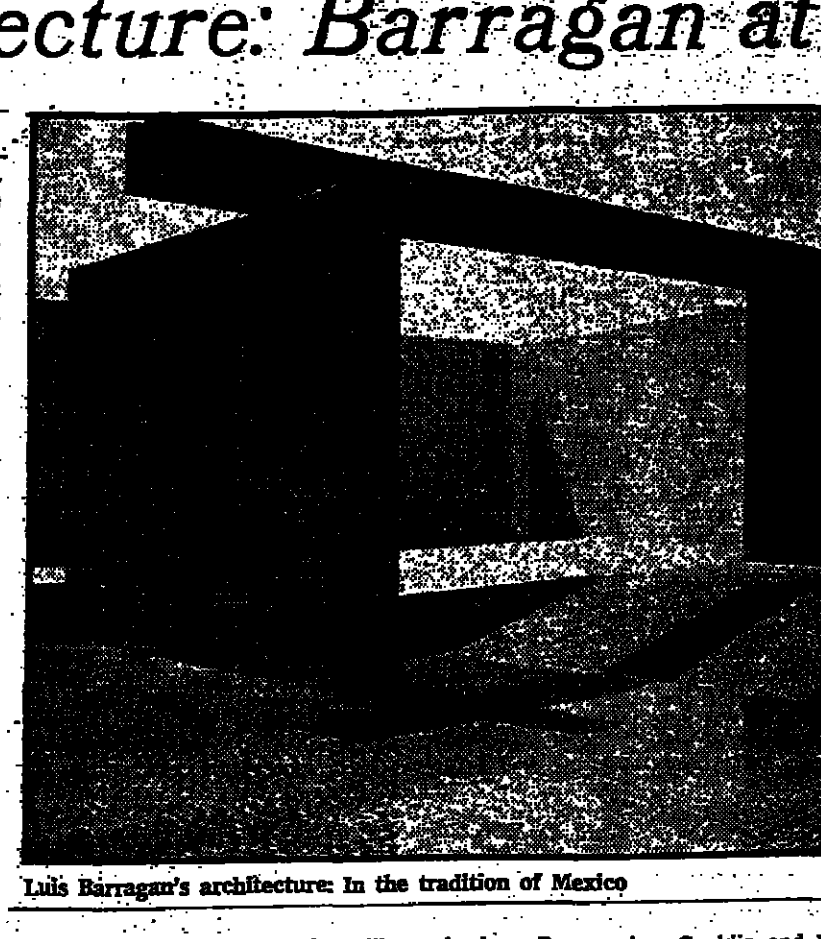
By PAUL GOLDBERGER

Luis Barragan's architecture is little known to the American public, but his buildings and monuments are among the supreme works of contemporary architecture in Mexico. They are abstract in one sense because they rely heavily on simple geometric forms and straight lines, yet they tie deeply into the tradition of Mexico by their use of rich color, serene gardens and stucco walls.

It is not an architecture easily reproduced, since its primal qualities cry out to be experienced. Volume and the subtle juxtaposition of forms in space, changing as one moves position, are crucial to an understanding of Barragan's places.

But the Museum of Modern Art and Emilio Ambasz, its curator of design, have done an admirable job in trying to communicate Barragan's work in a new exhibition, "The Architecture of Luis Barragan," opening today at the museum's Goodwin Galleries, where it will run through Sept. 7. The exhibition wisely makes no attempt to recreate literally the experience of visiting a Barragan building; instead, it modestly offers a series of slides with a thoughtful narration.

Especially moving are the views of Barragan's fountains and monuments, such as Los Clubes of 1963-64 in the Mexico City suburbs, where water and shadow play against the intersecting planes of warmly colored walls, and the 1957 set of abstract towers, a fantasy skyline, at Mexico City's northern entrance.



Luis Barragan's architecture: In the tradition of Mexico

The show is, by its very nature, more a piece of theater than a traditional art exhibition, since the viewer sits for 20 minutes as the slides and commentary unfold. If it is not, as Mr. Ambasz has suggested, a good basic introduction to architecture for children (though children will surely love Barragan's sensual colors) it is a gentle and altogether appropriate way to introduce a sublime body of architectural work to the New York public.

Another current architectural exhibit provides a very different sort of experience from sitting in a hushed room at the Modern. It is the display of drawings by James Rossant, partner at the New York architectural firm of Conklin and Rossant, and it will be on display at the Spaced Gallery, 165 West 72d Street, until July 2.

Spaced is the recent creation of Judith York Newman, an architect with offices in the same building; it is a pleasant set of alcoves filling most of a floor above a West Side delicatessen. Doubtless nowhere but in New York could one ascend a stair past the smell of pastrami to a room ... the di... chitect...

Susan Watson, Ingenue, Solos

By JOHN S. WILSON

If Barbara Cook could turn successfully to nightclubs after a long career as a Broadway musical ingenue, why not Susan Watson, who succeeded Miss Cook as a perpetual Broadway ingenue? Starting with "Bye Bye Birdie" in 1960, Miss Watson sang and smiled her way through a long string of musicals, including "Carnival," "Ben Franklin in Paris," "Carousel," Oklahoma!," "Celebration and most recently, "No, No, Nanette."

She is making her nightclub debut at The Ballroom, 458 West Broadway, with an act that is a mixture, in both material and style, of Broadway and nightclub. The big full-bodied voice, which, in the theater, always had some initial shock value coming from a seemingly wide-eyed little girl, is effectively in evidence, but some of the stage mannerisms that go with it seem a bit stiff in the intimate surroundings of The Ballroom.

However, Miss Watson shows that she can make the adjustment when she eases gently but pointedly into Gretchen Cryer and Nancy Ford's feminist song, "Changing," or gives "I Know That You Know" a slow and easy lilt. She has some special material about computer dating and TV commercials that provide a change of pace, but that change is arrived at in more rewarding fashion when she goes to Jerry Herman's score for "Mack and Mabel" for a song that provides opportunities for dancing, parody and a big vocal climax.

At the moment, Miss Watson seems to have one foot still firmly in the theater with the other tentatively exploring the nightclub setting. As that nightclub foot becomes a little more assertive, her performance may achieve a balance that will give more emphasis to the qualities that she can bring to this situation.

Opera: 'Mac[beth]' A la Caldwe[ll]

By PETER G. DAVIS

VERDI'S "Macbeth" received the inimitable Sarah Caldwell touch Wednesday night in the Opera Company of Boston's final production of the season. Miss Caldwell's staging of the 1865 revised version of the opera was full of her customary vivid theatrical ideas, some of them strong and effective, others arbitrary and infuriating.

The overall somber nature of the stage pictures created an appropriately dark and brooding atmosphere, heightened by the stark, eerie sets by Herber Senn and Helen Pond. The offstage murder of King Duncan, the discovery of his corpse and subsequent chaotic finale were paced with a superb sense of the dramatic moment.

Miss Caldwell's treatment of the witches was interesting. Most "Macbeth" productions minimize the participation of these unintentionally humorous creatures, generally considered to be something of a musical miscalculation on Verdi's part. In Boston, however, covens of weird sisters materialized at every opportunity.

A bold stroke, but unfortunately Miss Caldwell went a step too far by establishing Lady Macbeth as their leader, a fact made clear by the lady's unscheduled appearance as Hecate, the goddess of sorcery, during the Act III ballet. By turning Lady Macbeth into a supernatural fiend, Miss Caldwell managed to make the sleepwalking scene completely irrelevant—what witch would ever suffer such a human breakdown from guilt and remorse?

Music: Amiable Chamber Players

By ALLEN HUGHES

The Interaction Chamber Players, an ensemble made up of three amiable and chatty young men, played an agreeable program of music for clarinet, piano and cello at Carnegie Recital Hall on Wednesday night.

The clarinetist, Ethan Sloane, was born in Springfield, Mass., and has a Ph.D. from Yale. Paul Posnak, the pianist, is from Brooklyn and had all of his music training, including doctoral study, at the Juilliard School. David Sella, the cellist, is from Israel; studied at Juilliard and is now a Ph.D. candidate at New York University.

There is, therefore, a lot of learning, in addition to musical skill, in these instrumentalists. Their program offered Bach's Suite No. 3 in C for Unaccompanied Cello, Debussy's "L'Isle Joyeuse" for piano, Brahms's Clarinet Sonata in F minor and D'Indy's Trio in B-flat minor (Op. 29), and their comments about these works were at once engaging and informative.

The performances were attractive, too. Mr. Sella's playing of the Bach Suite established the prevailing manner for the evening. It was efficient, well thought out, and sensitive in the projection of general moods. His interpretation was, in fact, probably more subtle than, say, Mr. Posnak's of "L'Isle Joyeuse" or Mr. Sloane's account of the clarinet sonata.

But everything was pleasant, and the three performers' collaboration in the discursive, seldom-played D'Indy Trio made the work seem attractive enough to merit more attention than it has had over the last 50 years.

Modern to Screen Features History

The development of the American feature film from its roots through 1971 is the subject of "The History of Film" series that starts Sundays at the Museum of Modern Art.

This is the fourth cycle in the 148-week series of Sunday evening showings of foreign films, shorts, avant-garde and animated movies.

Sunday, starting at 5 P.M., there will be short films by Edison, Lumière, Méliès, Sklandanowsky and American Mutoscope. "La Naissance du Cinéma," by Roger Leenhardt, with French narration but no English subtitles, will also be shown.

The museum is at 11 West 53d Street, between Fifth Avenue and the Avenue of Americas.

Elton John Plans East Coast Tour

Elton John, the rock star, will make his first East Coast and Midwest tour since late 1974, starting June 29, at the Capitol Center in Largo, Md., and ending Aug. 10, 11, 12, 13 and 15 at Madison Square Garden. Except for three outdoor stadium dates, all the concerts will be indoors—an unusual decision for an attraction of Mr. John's magnitude. In all, there will be 27 performances in 16 cities.

Although there have been reports that Mr. John might do six or seven shows at the Garden (breaking the Rolling Stones' record of six last summer), no one in the John organization yesterday would confirm the possibility of added dates.

almost luncheonette settings, Settebello is more a combination of a café-night club.

Digging out of about 35 years of filth and neglect and removing 400 pounds of peanut shells left behind by Your Father's Mustache ("There were even peanut shells in the safe," Alfredo said, "and eight moose heads that I gave away plus two original Tiffany lampshades that I kept."), he had the walls mellowed with softly flocke: wallpaper panels in glowing tones of beige, gold, orange and celadon green. Carpeting on the ceiling softens acoustics and milk glass ellipses inspired by art deco make subtly effective chandeliers. Tortoise-patterned formica tops the tables and wraps around the congenial circular bar, while polished brass rails divide raised seating areas from the stage and dance floor.

Weather permitting, stained-glass windows will be opened during the daytime, so anyone coming in for brunch, lunch or a snack can enjoy sunshine along with golden frittatas of asparagus or spinach with cheese and proscuitto, eggs alla romano (scrambled with diced fresh tomatoes), or the unusual Chinese-inspired eggs Settebello from Genoa. "We used to have a ristorante orientale there in the old days," he explained. "A Chinese restaurant that made this dish of scrambled eggs, diced shrimp, walnuts, onions and a little wine."

Savory casseroles such as the garlic-scented white beans and cotteghino sausage, pasta dishes enriched with meats, vegetables, cream or a gentle blush of tomatoes, salads, and an antipasto that is more than a meal will be on the daytime menu. es will hamburger Settebello, a blend of beef and sauteed Italian sausage, mixed with grated Parmestan, parsley and onion, served on freshly toasted garlic bread with a homemade tomato-caper sauce, never ketchup.

Along with the daytime fare will come an equally light-handed menu of entertainment: card-readers, perhaps a string quartet now and then, or acts trying out for the evening revue in front of the afternoon crowd. "Maybe we will even revive tea dancing in the fall." Alfredo mused wistfully, "You know, the real thing, with waltzes, fox trots and tangos."

Unquestionably the most elaborate effort takes place in the evening, both in the kitchen and on stage. Along with the full-fledged hour-and-a-quarter European-style cabaret review, complete with costumed song and dance numbers, a Russian clown and campy dramatic vignettes, all produced by Alfredo's wife, Jane White, an actress who also stars in the show, comes an equally well orchestrated menu of classic north Italian dishes meticulously reproduced by the chef.

Appetizers here were so glorious it was a temptation to order seconds and forget the rest of the meal. The artichoke in its lightly garlicked green herb broth was tenderly cooked affogato so almost all the leaves could be eaten. Large, firm shrimp chilled in a lemon olive oil marinade with diced mushrooms, plump snails in a tarragon wine sauce, the mildest sweetest baby-pink proscuitto on ripe cantaloupe, and golden baked clams under a crisp mantle of oregano- and garlic-flavored crumbs were all perfectly done.

Alfredo's pastas have always been triumphs, and except for a too-dry carbonara, his record is intact. Canneloni filled with chicken, beef and spinach was baked in a gossamer tomato sauce and the jade green basil-perfumed pesto on immaculately al dente spaghettini got an extra lift from a light showering of the grated sheeps' milk cheese, pecorino.

Sublime Pasta

As sublime as the other pasta dishes were, none could compete with spaghettini Settebello, the thin, tender threads of pasta tossed with gently cooked, al dente bits of broccoli, asparagus, cauliflower and zucchini, all given a satin gloss of cream, cheese and butter.

While Alfredo will feature several fish dishes such as the famed cioppino stew of Livorno, a roasted chicken with an herb, garlic and bread stuffing, and several bef dishs, only the veal scallopini entrees were available for the preview tasting. The veal francese was properly enrobed in a light egg batter coating, sprightly with lemon juice and parsley, the piccante was as tender as it should be with just the right accents of capers and lemon, and the house special, again Settebello, was an inspired combination of lightly sauteed scallopini enriched with diced ham, peas, and pimentos, in a heady wine sauce glacé.

Alfredo is still working out his dessert selection, but it will certainly include the richly creamy cheese cake crowned with a topping of raisins and grapes, a bit too sweet for my taste, strawberries, and a cake as special as those he offers at Trattoria and Tavolo Calda.

Along with Stan Freeman at the piano after the main show, the supper menu will offer four pastas, two or three appetizers, and a fish and chicken specialty.

Unlike Alfredo's other two outposts, Settebello has a full liquor license, with French and Italian wines now, and some good California choices to follow.

The full dinner described for four, with a bottle of Ruffino Riserve Ducale Chianti, plus the floor show came to $76.

Barely a week old, Settebello is still in need of some finishing touches, not only on the menu but even more so with the floor show. "But then," Alfredo explains, "food and show business are one and the same thing. Nothing is ever really finished. At a good restaurant it is always opening night—always a new audience, and every dish cooked in the kitchen is a brand new act."

Restaurants | John Canaday

SEA VENTURE, which has been in operation for about a year and a half at 1359 First Avenue, corner of 73d Street, is one of the rare New York fish restaurants that thinks a fish restaurant can be a restaurant first and fishy second, by which I mean that it doesn't pretend you're at dockside and hence ready to put up with crowded tables, casual accessories, and heave-ho service, all rationalized as atmosphere.

There's no reason a fish (seafood, if you wish) restaurant can't be elegant, and although Sea Venture isn't exactly Prunier reborn, it does distinguish between city dining and mess call on a trawler. None of the three maitres d'hôtel who greeted us on different occasions were very impressive, the first being bored to death with his job and the other two being more interested in joshing around with the staff than in keeping an eye on the service; but everything is forgiven—everything—because one of the latter, at the request of a table near ours, turned off the music in our section.

Sea Venture has live music at some hours, but the rest of the time it is taped stuff, ill-selected in the first place and badly reproduced in the second. The relief when it went off was delectable, and I would like to ask all restaurant owners in New York this question: Have you ever turned the music off at the request of one diner and had another diner ask that it be turned back on?

About the food:

A first test, simple broiled red snapper ($8.75) was passed with honors. Equally high marks went to grilled bay scallops ($8.95). Entrees include either rice or baked potato (french fries on request, we discovered) and either cole slaw or salad. The cole slaw is a nice, fresh, crisp version of the good old standard. The salad is an acceptable mixture of greens with bits of tomato topped with carrots sliced as thin as veils, very nice, but the so-called French dressing we chose turned out to be that slick pink stuff that comes in a bottle. Or a vat. Surprising, because it was out of key with the kitchen's high level.

Portions are generous, and prices go as low as $5.95 for a broiled half chicken. At the top there is filet mignon and lobster tail combination at $11.95. Both members of this team were well represented the time we tried it, but it's a lot of money and when we go back, it will be the broiled snapper again. There is a crabmeat curry at $9.75 that should please anyone who likes curries sweet. We are antisweet and pro-spice in the curry department, and this one tasted as if it had orange marmalade in it, but this is stated not as an objection, but as a characterization. The crabmeat itself was impeccable.

The most sensible-looking item on a seductive pastry table was an apple tart, which turned out to be a good choice. With vanilla ice cream added it came to something like $3, although my notes don't have the exact price.

Add up all the tables and I suspect that Sea Venture would come out as a fairly large restaurant, but what with division into rooms and subdivisions in the way of different floor levels, it doesn't seem so. The décor is unobtrusive—must be, since we have forgotten it, except that it looked fresh and pleasant. There are healthy plants around, always desirable dining companions. All told, very good, and recommended.

There are two Taco Villas, Mexican restaurants on the West Side, one at 368 Columbus Avenue at 77th Street, the other at 2785 Broadway at 107th Street. They have the same menu and might be identical twins in décor (serapes, iron chairs, tiles, things like that, attractively disposed) except that the Broadway twin is much smaller, about half the size of the Columbus Avenue twin, in both its glassed-in sidewalk terrace and its inner room. And the Columbus Avenue Taco Villa has a full liquor license while the Broadway one serves only beer and wine.

The Columbus terrace has the advantage of being just across the street from the American Museum of Natural History, a handsome building set among trees that just now are at their most beautiful. The variegated sidewalk populace of that part of the city also makes for a very good passing show. At Broadway and 107th there isn't much to look at in the way of either nature or architecture, and the live show can have some pretty rough spots, which accounts for the difference in stars. Any differences in the preparation of food probably balance out.

At both places we had mole verde ($4.75), as good as

Other attractions include the Monty Waters big band, which is somewhere near the mainstream end of the avant-garde spectrum (tomorrow, 4 to 6 P.M.), and two 6 A.M. concerts, one by Marvin Blackman's Bond Street Gang tomorrow and the other by Billy Parker, drummer, and his eclectic Fourth World on Sunday.

Sunrise Studio, 122 Second Avenue, south of St. Mark's Place, third floor (533-4030): This loft is the home of Free Life Communications, a musicians' collective that has included the members of Dave Liebman's Lookout Farm. Lookout Farm plays on Sunday at 8:30 P.M. There's a meeting of African, Indian and other international percussionists this evening at 8 P.M. Tomorrow at 2 P.M. there's a choir composed of string basses under the direction of John Shea.

In addition to the celebration, there are other signs *that New York's loft jazz, one of the few authentic under-*ground musical activities left in the city, is about to go overground on a national scale. Alan Douglas, a record producer whose projects have included the Last Poets, Jimi Hendrix's posthumous recording releases and the first American disks by the jazz-rock guitarist John McLaughlin, recorded the entire spring festival at Studio Rivbea and plans to issue a series of loft jazz anthology records. Rivbea will be presenting the same lineup of groups at its summer festival, July 1-10, with three groups performing each night.

"We don't advertise too much," confides Rivbea's Sam Rivers, "because we can't handle the kind of audiences we might attract. We can seat 150 people comfortably, 250 maximum, but we've occasionally had 700 or 800 people show up." Seating at the Rivbea summer festival, like the celebration, will be first come, first-served.

White rock artists, many of them holdovers from the '60's, dominate the top 10 album charts at the moment. But with the release of "Harvest for the World" (T-Neck), the Isley Brothers begin a counterattack. The Isleys have been one of the most uninhibited black rock groups since "Shout," their 1959 hit, and during the last few years they have become one of the most popular groups in America, black or white. Their previous album, "The Heat Is On," had an unusually long run in the top 10 and eventually sold around 1.7 million units on disk and tape.

The Isleys have always specialized in energetic, gritty, gospel-rooted music. "Shout" was one of the first pop hits in the sanctified church style that later became such an important part of soul music, and their later "Twist and Shout" was the wildest of all the twist records.

Ernie Isley is now the leading guitarist playing in the Hendrix mode, and he is in superb form on "Harvest." But over all, the new album is mellower than much of the earlier Isleys work. The group is still purveying its street-wise brand of social consciousness, but there is more emphasis on ballads, less on gospel hysteria than ever before. It will be interesting to see whether the new album duplicates or exceeds the chart performance of its predecessor.

Now In New York

The sensational cast of Broadway's divine "My Fair Lady," will be wined and dined at Luchow's this Sunday evening, as the Sunday Celebrity Salute drinks a toast or two or three to Ian Richardson, George Rose and Christina Andreas — the three principals in the smash hit. And a special Lingonberry Crepe will be flambeed for George Rose in honor of the Tony Award he received—and deservedly so! — for his superb work in the play.

And for those of you with a warm spot in your heart for a touch of the grape, keep in mind that the extraordinarily popular May Wine Festival has been held over at the 14th Street landmark restaurant through — as of this writing — the first week in June. If the festival is extended further, I'll let you know just as soon as I hear. Luchow's, a way of life for 94 years, I love you.

This weekend patrons at the Autopub will get a rare opportunity to enjoy the return of the magic wizardry of Cory and Gandolfo—two fabulous clowns/magicians who startle, amuse, and generally create happiness wherever they go. They'll be at the 'Pub from noon 'till 8:30 this Saturday, and are prepared with dozens of tricks up their sleeves with which they'll personally entertain each guest as they stroll through the restaurant and stop at the tables of wide-eyed youngsters — and their possibly doubting parents too. Believe me — I know about this duo's feats. I've been to see Cory and Gandolfo at work and they are truly amazing! Lots of treats on the Autopub menu, too. Real kid-favorites like foot-long hotdogs, super burgers, luscious ice cream sundaes, etc. For the more mature palate, ahem, the menu features a variety of crisp seasonal salads, and plenty of easy-on-the-waistline broiled entrees also. The 59th Street and Fifth Avenue restaurant is right at the south entrance to Central Park, so you can plan a full family day of romping in the park, lunching at the 'Pub, and taking in — for no additional charge — the antics of Cory and Gandolfo.

The new Prom Steakburger Supper package at the Riverboat Night Club, underground at 34th Street and Fifth Avenue, has been such a walloping success that it's going to be incorporated as a permanent Riverboat feature to continue after the prom season ends. It's an incredible bargain of a deal for after hours night owls — it goes into effect at 11 PM each evening—offering all you can drink before, during and after a mouth-watering steakburger supper, plus free admission to the late show, plus dancing to the non-stop music of two live orchestras. The price? Only $11.95. And don't think that that means $11.95 + — 'cause that one single price includes all tips, taxes and even the music charge, too! And that's it — finito — not one red cent more!

Democratic V.I.P.s are scouring the midtown area making sure that visiting Democrats during Convention Week coming up will have plenty of watering holes available for them in which to quench their thirst as things heat up inside Madison Square Garden. Engaged in just such a research project, Governor Carey stopped into Toots Shor's Third Street saloon last week, giving it the once over and rating it AAA. Also in last week was Toot's very dear friend, Bob Hope. Toots and Hope closed the place at 2 AM, only after hours of entertaining a few dozen guests who were lucky enough to be included in the pair's rollicking reminiscences.

Thirteen of America's most gifted artists were asked to celebrate the Bicentennial with us by looking forward to the nation's third century and committing their anticipations to a series of prints.

The result is a magnificent portfolio of signed and numbered prints titled America: The Third Century which has been recognized by the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration and carries the official Bicentennial seal.

These portfolios are available at leading art galleries. They also provide the basis for a series of Bicentennial posters. And those posters are included in the major museum exhibition, "Images of An Era: The American Poster 1945-1975," organized by the Office of Exhibitions Abroad, National Collection of Fine Arts, Smithsonian Institution.

"Images of An Era" can be seen at New York University's Grey Art Gallery and Study Center, 100 Washington Square East, beginning Tuesday, May 25. (An extraordinarily handsome catalog with more than 250 full-color reproductions of the posters in this show, also has been produced.)

We hope everyone in the nation has a chance to see this exciting Bicentennial collection in one form or another.

"America: The Third Century" posters and portfolios are available at Pace Editions, Inc., 32 East 57th Street, and Gimpel-Weitzenhoffer Gallery, 1040 Madison Avenue.

Art: Warhol Meets Wyeth

By HILTON KRAMER

IT MAY or may not be true, as George Orwell believed, that every man gets the face he deserves at the age of 50, but it is undoubtedly true that certain faces sooner or later—exactly when depends on the vagaries of publicity—get the portraits they deserve.

This particular form of pictorial justice has now been meted out to both James Wyeth and Andy Warhol who, in a rare display of mutual self-sacrifice, have submitted to the ordeal of having their portraits painted by each other.

The results—currently on view at the Coe Kerr Gallery, 49 East 82d Street (through July 9)—constitute a notable event, if not exactly in the history of art, then surely in the history of artistic celebrity. Here are two artists who, for the last decade, have seemed to occupy opposite poles in the world where art is preposterously overpraised and sold at ridiculously high prices and where, as a consequence, it acquires a fame and distinction out of all proportion to its actual esthetic merit. Not surprisingly, they turn out to have quite a lot in common.

Mr. Wyeth, scion of a family of famous artists, represents everything that is retrograde about the old, conservative realism, for his art is little more than a facile rehearsal of academic technique at the service of a moribund "tradition." Mr. Warhol, the Pop artist who became the darling of the gossip columnists and the baeu monde, represents what, in the discothèque atmosphere of the 60's, it pleased a great many people to mistake for something avant-garde. Each seemed to embody an esthetic principle that negated what the other stood for.

Yet, seeing their work side by side on this ocassion, it is clear that both are really skilled illustrators plying a popular trade in the production of easy, ephemeral images. They differ only in the means they employ in reaching a similar end. Whereas Mr. Wyeth offers us a slick parody of the old academic mannerisms, Mr. Warhol gives us a slick variation on modernist reductionism. In the end, however, it comes to the same thing—a vulgar, vacuous, theatrical art that ministers to a cheap and ready taste.

As an exercise in the exploitation of such taste, this show—consisting of drawings as well as the finished portraits—does have an undeniable, indeed almost an archetypal, interest. For its underlying, unacknowledged scenario is a curious, all-male version of Beauty and the Beast.

The role of Beauty is, of course, reserved for the face of Mr. Wyeth, whose handsome features are rendered by Mr. Warhol in his familiar movie-poster manner. There are six silkscreen-and-acrylic versions of this "Portrait of Jamie," based on polaroid pictures, but there could easily be 60. The color varies, but the image is the same—a cosmetic cliché in which personality is sacrificed to the artifice of glamour.

More interesting than Mr. Warhol's paintings are his drawings, which recall Jean Cocteau's pastiche of Picasso's neoclassical style. And indeed, Mr. Wyeth emerges from these drawings looking more than a little like Cocteau's androgenous vision of Jean Marais.

Mr. Warhol, on the other hand, with his acid yellow hair and red-blotched face and vacant stare, makes the perfect figure of a Beast in this pictorial fable. Mr. Wyeth has been unsparing in depicting this unlovely countenance—so unrelievedly grotesque that one wonders if Mr. Warhol, with his unfailing instinct for theatrical effects, had not got himself "made up" for the part.

Then there are Mr. Wyeth's drawings, which give us a more benign and more affectionate account of Mr. Warhol. They are the kind of drawings you might expect to see adorning the pages of New York magazine—illustrating, say, a story about Andy Warhol and his beloved dachshund, Archie. It is Archie, by the way, who appears in both the finished portrait and in many of the drawings, that is the most appealing figure in the show. In this celebrity charade of Beauty and the Beast, only Archie strikes us as somehow a little "human."

Other exhibitions this week include the following:

John Button (Kornblee, 20 West 57th Street): John Button has brought back from his rcent travels in California, New Mexico and Texas a delightful series of small (14 by 20 inches) gouaches on architectural subjects. Whether the subject is a slice of a blue-gray flat-roof cottage set against a pink sky in Santa Monica or the glassy reflections on the walls of the Pennzoil towers in Houston, Mr. Button transforms it into a spare, concentrated structure of light and space. Through June 12.

Nathan Lerner (Frumkin, 50 West 57th Street): This is an absorbing show of 70 photographs from th 1930's and 40's by a former student and teacher at the New Bauhaus that was established by Moholy-Nagy in Chicago in the 30's to continue the work of original German Bauhaus, which had been closed by the Nazis. As we might expect, there are a great many "experiments" in photographing light and objects as abstract configurations, but there is a good deal more besides—documentary pictures of Chicago in the Depression, Atgetlike pictures of shop windows, and (surprising, perhaps, from a photographer of the Bauhaus persuasion) even some ventures in a Dali-like surrealism. Closes on Saturday.

end to have been distinctly repetitious. Post-Freudian procedures that in 1924 seemed like a charter of liberty turn out by 1976 to have been just another variant of bondage.

This being so, it should be said at once that the case for André Masson's art is very well argued at the Modern Museum. There are even moments at which we might take him for a great painter too long misjudged and underrated. These moments occur when (as in "Ariadne's Thread," 1938) Masson takes a theme, refines and concentrates it, and sets it down with maximum cogency. To have got the lovers' embrace, the blood-soaked ambiance, the grotesque proportions of the Minotaur and the claustrophobic nature of the labyrinth into one dense and highly evocative image is no small achievement.

The advocacy is also seen at its best in the wise choice of larger paintings. It is a relief, undeniably, to come upon a painting like "Massacre in a Field" (1939) in which the moto perpetuo of that restless hand lets up for a while; the subject may have a premonitory dread, but the tempo is that of harvesting at a time when harvesting was done by hand. It is also not so much a relief as a joy to come upon certain masterworks of Masson's American period (1941-45).

That period has of late been considered largely in the context of Masson's influence (or lack of influence, according to one's point of view) on American painting. One of the merits of William Rubin's long essay in the catalogue (which costs $8.95 and is cheap at the price) is that he presses not at all upon this point.

Mr. Rubin and his colleague stress the importance for Masson both of his enforced sojourn in Martinique (in 1941, on the way to this country) and of his first experience of an autumn in Connecticut (same year). Masson had always looked attentively at nature (see the intimations of Spanish landscape in the present show); but nature quite often took second place to those ferocious knots in Masson's inmost being that he was not at all in a hurry to untie. Martinique in its untidied opulence was a terrific treat for him, Freud or no Freud; and there is evidence at the Modern Museum that when the Massons were living in isolation in Connecticut (he did not know, and never learned, a word of English) nature once again pressed in upon him with a tenacity not often found in Europe.

And not only nature, either. One of the great pleasures of the show is a collage called "Street Singer" (1941). For just this once Masson allowed himself a direct reference to the country in which he had found asylum (but which he left at the first possible opportunity). There we see a maple leaf, plucked from the ground at the terminal point of its life. There too is a piece of sheet music, collaged in such a way that it represents both the singer and the song. The song in question is called "Our Times," and at the foot of the page we see two meaningful words: "The Bowery." This delicious little work is like nothing else in the show, and for all its echoes of Ernst and Miro it stands for one of the moments at which Masson stood outside himself and allowed comedy to stand beside tragedy (or beside disquiet) in his art.

But then this show is full of astute interventions that aerate the achievement of Masson just when we begin to jib at having to go round the same old racecourse once again. It is full of symbols, that racecourse. No sooner have we deciphered one set than another one turns up. No sooner has one sanguinary conflict come to an end (fish against fish, fish against horses, men against men, men against women, horses against birds) than another breaks out. Not all of this is as new as a novice might infer from the catalogue, which nowhere points out that the "battle of fishes" motif had been thoroughly explored by Max Ernst as early as 1917. And, much as I for one applaud Masson for his freedom from Germanophobia, there is something really rather odd about a French painter who could produce an enormous portrait of Goethe in 1940, of all years, and placidly note the date on the canvas.

So there is a lot to discuss in this show, which is there through Aug. 17. André Masson is almost the last of the great pre-World War I Europeans, and we owe it to him to study the facts of his achievement as they are set out at the Modern Museum. (Carolyn Lanchner's essay has a lot of indispensable biographical matter, but it's no more than a beginning in relation to someone who has engaged the affection of people of consequence ever since the poet Emile Verhaeren got hold of him in Brussels in 1912 and said "Go to Paris! That's where painting is being made!").

Sculpture Show Set in Greenwich

An outdoor exhibition of sculpture by prominent American artists will go on view tomorrow in Greenwich, Conn. Alexander Calder, Claes Oldenburg, Willem de Kooning and Tony Smith are among those whose works will be displayed in the parks and plazas of the town through October.

The opening tomorrow at 2 P.M., in the Greenwich Common, will feature a trumpet fanfare, a band, and free balloons for children. Joseph Hirshhorn, a resident of the town, will speak.

Sculpture '76 is sponsored by the Greenwich Arts Council. For further information, call (203) 869-2065.

Hanging Sculpture At Waterside Offers A Wash of Sundrops

THERE is something about the sight of a bare, concrete piazza that sets our city's more public-spirited art lovers salivating. And so it is with the vast open arena at Waterside, the newish apartment complex on the East River at 26th Street. Last year the high-minded Public Arts Council (a private, nonprofit group) sponsored a show there of tensile metal structures by Kenneth Snelson. And now, beginning tomorrow, the council will serve up a six-month exhibition of Dennis Valinski's "gauze sculptures"—giant, aerial constructions, of subtly tinted modacrylic fabric rimmed with rattan and intended, according to the sculptor, to give the effect of "wash drawings in space."

The splashiest of the works is called "Sundrop," a 60-foot cornucopia of bright yellow "gauze," whose base is ringed with sky-blue leaf forms attached to hickory boughs. It will sway, suspended between two 40-story apartment towers, over clumps of greenery near the river's edge, some 10 to 12 feet above the heads of viewers.

"Sculpture today is much too esoteric. It refers to itself, to other artists and their problems," says Mr. Valinski, who at the age of 29 has behind him a Master of Fine Arts degree from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago and a stint at teaching art in a New Jersey high school. "I'm trying to make my work a little less formal, dealing with basic human feelings instead of notions about art."

Mr. Valinski, thin, bearded and intense, started out working with metal. But a visit with his students to the Storm King Art Center in Mountainville, N.Y., and the outdoor Art Park in Cornwall, N.Y., convinced him that contemporary sculpture "had little relation to the esthetic information in the landscape." He added: "I thought there could be a more intimate blending between outdoor sculpture and their sites so I started playing with mesh fabric, through which the sun and atmosphere could filter."

When Mr. Valinksi first saw Waterside, at the behest of Doris Freedman, chairman of the Public Arts Council, he recalled thinking: "Wow. How do you place something there that doesn't shrink to the size of an ant?" He believes he has solved the problem with "Sundrop." "It works, rather than competes, with the architectural spaces," he said. "As it sways in the wind, it locks itself into the landscape between the trees, then breaks away to make a dramatic 'cut'—it's almost a sculptural performance."

Tomorrow's multimedia opening, from 1 to 5 P.M., will include a Valinski "skylaunch," a kitelike structure floated up with helium balloons, original music composed by Robert Milnes, and dances by the "Celebrations," a group whose movements around the plaza, it is hoped, will encourage audience response.

Look skyward, too, this Saturday, between 2 and 4 P.M., for a show of ballons flung into the stratosphere over Central Park's East Meadow (97th Street and Fifth Avenue). The launcher is Gene Thompson, a sculptor from the West Coast who calls his display of 150 helium-filled weather balloons, each four feet in diameter, a "sky piece," or "current event" (get it?). Working with balloons for "at least 10 years," Mr. Thompson has executed about 80 such launchings on the coast, but this marks his first balloon show here.

Now that cable TV has come to the SoHo art community (last February, Manhattan Cable TV extended one-way receiving facilities to the Kitchen, the live-wire video center at 59 Wooster Street) a group of video organizations and artists has formed a committee called Cable SoHo. Purpose: to encourage the development of a two-way system allowing cultural facilities in downtown New York—galleries, schools, theaters, video groups and artists not only to receive outside programs, but also to originate and beam their own to each other and to the estimated 80,000 subscribers plugged into Manhattan Cable TV.

"We'd like to wire up groups so that we can talk with each other, and also open a channel for arts programming to the entire city," says John Trayna of Electronic Arts Intermix one of the committee's member groups. Among the other groups are Global Village, The Kitchen, Anthology Film Archives, The Clocktower, Cable Arts Foundation and Artists Space; the individual artists on the committee include Douglas Davis, Jaime Davidovitch, and Ira Schneider.

As things stand now, Manhattan Cable projects cable input for each of the eight Manhattan planning board areas that are in its franchise zone. The SoHo Cable committee hopes to work with Board No. 2, which covers SoHo, and also to raise funds to buy the necessary two-way equipment. But it stresses that its input would be different from the usual community fare.

"Our objective in the broadest sense is unashamedly cultural," says a committee statement. "We seek ways and means to experiment with cable television as an artistic medium." The cable TV installation at the Kitchen, for example, was inaugurated by Douglas Davis, whose experimental "Three Silent and Secret Acts" was, among other things, an attempt to show how two-way cabling would work.

A globe, wearing a gas mask, appears on a poster that bears the legend, "Good to the Last Breath." Uncle Sam in the guise of a skeleton adorns a recruiting poster emblazoned with the slogn "I Want You for the U.S. Army." "You Don't Have to be Jewish to Love Levy's," reads a poster that shows an Indian ingesting a slice of rye.

They're on view in "Images of an Era," more than 250 American posters of the postwar period, advising us what to eat, see, read, hear wear, visit, protest, and contribute to, at New York University's Grey Art Gallery and Study Center, 100 Washington Square East. Done by artists (ranging from Ben Shahn to Claes Oldenburg), graphic designers, anonymous workshops and street sloganeers, the posters comprise what's touted as the first museum show of posters from the past three decades.

Organized by the Smithsonian Institution's National Collection of Fine Arts, the show includes 13 original posters by contemporary artists commissioned by the Mobil Oil Corporation to honor—you guessed it—the Bicentennial. (Mobil has also financed the show, which will travel to a dozen European cities.)

Viewing days: from noon to 4 P.M. Mondays through Thursdays, 11 A.M. to 6 P.M. on Saturdays. Closed Fridays.

Good as its word, the Metropolitan Museum is now shaping the show of realist American art that it agreed last year to send to the Soviet Union. The show, conceived as part of the 1975 agreement between the Met and Soviet cultural officials to exchange major art exhibitions, is being organized by Henry Geldzahler, curator of 20th-century art at the museum, and Tom Garver, curator of exhibitions at the Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco. (San Francisco, which has one of the two Soviet consulates in this country, will bring a West Coast voice to the exhibition.)

The show to appear in three Russian cities, has as its title, "Representations of America," a better title than "American Realism," explains Mr. Geldzahler, "because no one's really defined realism, and this has broader range." Under that rubric, this display will include about a half-dozen 19th-century paintings as a context, plus 50 or 60 20th-century works, from the ashcan school through social realism to Pop Art and more current modes. The tentative case includes: George Bellows, Edward Hopper. Thomas Hart Benton, Jack Levine, Ben Shahn. Fairfield Porter, Jasper Johns, Robert Rauschenberg, Andy Warhol, Tom Wesselmann, Richard Estes, Chuck Close, Joseph Raffael ad Philip Pearlstein.

The show will not ignore the seamier side of American life, explains Mr. Garver, thus "pointing by allusion to the fact that Americans are free to paint what they like."

Records: Tilting at 'Don Quixote'

STRAUSS: DON QUIXOTE. Herbert von Karajan, conductor; Mstislav Rostropovich, cello soloist; Ulrich Koch, viola soloist; Berlin Philharmonic. Angel S-37057 (stereo and quadraphonic).

Mstislav Rostropovich: Invariably eloquent

This is an exceptionally deliberate and expansive reading by a cellist, a conductor and an orchestra capable of sustaining a drawn-out line without letting a sag or crack show. Karajan and the Berlin Philharmonic discover unexpected refinement in the Strauss score at times, but also can tear right into the famous pictorial passages such as the Don's rout of the bleating sheep and his sighting of the flying horse. Mstislav Rostropovich's Don Q. is invariably eloquent and ultimately touching even though the cellist's interpretative fervor sometimes results in a tone that is not the smoothest. Much of the power of his playing comes from his ability to change the shading of each note, if necessary, and to inflect his phrases with the naturalness of a great orator or actor. This "Don Quixote" does not wipe off the face of the earth such famous ones as the Reiner/Janigro for RCA or the Szell/Fournier for Columbia, but Rostropovich admirers will not be without it.

DONAL HENAHAN

BRUCKNER: MASS No. 2 IN E MINOR. Daniel Barenboim, conductor; John Alldis Choir; English Chamber Orchestra. Angel S-37112 (stereo and quadraphonic).

MOZART: THE LATE PIANO CONCERTOS (No. 21 in C, K. 467; No. 22 in E flat, K. 482; No. 23 in A, K. 488; No. 24 in C minor, K. 491; No. 25 in C, K. 503; No. 26 in D, K. 537). Daniel Barenboim, conductor and piano soloist; English Chamber Orchestra. Angel SDC-3830 (four disks).

BEETHOVEN: The Five Cello-Piano Sonatas, Magic Flute Variations and Judas Maccabaeus Variations. Jacqueline du Pré, cellist; Daniel Barenboim, pianist. Angel SCB-3823 (three disks).

It is not true that Daniel Barenboim lets no sun set without recording something; it merely seems that way. The ubiquitous pianist and conductor turns up here in three roles and performs like the youthful master he is in each. An album to treasure is the Beethoven set, in which Mr. Barenboim is heard as the pianist with his wife Jacqueline du Pré in performances recorded live in 1970 at the Edinburgh Festival. These are irresistible performances by ideally matched virtuosos and musicians, given added power by the listener's awareness that Miss du Pré's playing career was soon afterward to be cut short by an apparently incurable illness.

The Beethoven cello-piano sonatas have been recorded by other famous duos. The Rostropovich/Richter set on Philips leaps to mind first, but no latter-day entry can really outmode Casals/Schulhof, Feuermann/Hess or Starkin/Bogin in mono, either. Still, with Miss du Pré playing at her peak and Mr. Barenboim supplying the powerful piano partnership that these sonatas demand, this album assumes a special place.

Mr. Barenboim the conductor has been paying a lot of attention recently to Bruckner, and turns now to the glorious Mass in E minor. He takes a grand, almost theatrical, approach to the score and while his choir has problems with the high tessitura in the Sanctus and elsewhere (interminably sustained high A's, fortissimo), so do most of those who have recorded this mass. The wind playing is fine, the tempos are long-striding. On the whole, the Roger Norrington performance on Argo is better controlled vocally, however, and not quite so overblown in sonority and accent.

As a Mozart pianist and conductor, Mr. Barenboim leans toward a 19th-century salon approach, keeping matters in an intimate frame but often feeling the need to try to make the music more beautiful than it is, which is scarcely possible. Pretty little ritards and diminuendos that sound self-conscious occasionally bring one up short and draw attention away from the music. Most of the time, Mr. Barenboim and his orchestra manage to immerse themselves in the score, however, and then so does the listener. The pianist plays Mozart's cadenzas in the Concerto in A; otherwise he uses his own, Edwin Fischer's and Wanda Landowska's. The Barenboim cadenzas sound flossy and unstylish to these ears, but they are meant to dazzle and do.

Publishing: Brodkey Delivers

By THOMAS LASK

HAROLD BRODKEY'S novel, "A Party of Animals" (sometimes known as "Animal Corner"), is finally in at the office of Farrar, Straus & Giroux. "A Party of Animals" has been one of the most anticipated works of fiction in the last five years. Bits and pieces have appeared in American Review, Esquire and American Poetry Review. One lengthy segment was published only recently in The New Yorker, which had once run a briefer passage.

For the publisher it has been a long wait. The original contract was signed 16 years ago, Roger Straus, president oft he firm said. But there are no complaints. "An amazing work," he calls it. "A long Proustian novel that takes the main character from childhood to his graduation from college."

The typescript runs to 2,000 pages. On the basis of the published fragments, the Book-of-the-Month Club took it as an alternate selection, and after the judges have had a look at the complete novel, it could turn up as a main selection.

Publication is still a while off, about a year Mr. Straus estimates.

News of the Book-of-the-Month action left Mr. Brodkey skeptical.

"I am a pessimist by training," he said. "One of my favorite words is 'The void.'" It has been a long, long haul he conceded—five years—"I am emotionally finished."

What's next?

"There isn't anything next. I can't tell you how dead I am." Told of the Proustian label that his publisher had attached to the novel, Mr. Brodkey said: "Proust was more in the way than a mentor, but he's the greatest novelist."

What he hopes he has written is a "genuinely American Middle Western book." When he was young, he recalled, life appeared to him to be on one side and books on the other. All the answers seemed to him to be in the books.

"The gap between the two was too great for me to be happy," he said. "Human responses were not like those in books. My book is a debt to life that never got written."

"I'm still a hick," said Mr. Brodkey, who moved to New York from the St. Louis area in 1954. "But if my strength comes back, I'd like to do the two characters [with whom the novel ends] in New York."

For the immediate future anything he writes will be short: poems, a play, short pieces.

A library collection of published volumes of poetry, to number 3,000 by 1981, has been begun by the International Poetry Forum in cooperation with the Carnegie Library in Pittsburgh. The Poetry Forum, now in its 10th year, offers poetry readings, publishes poetry, gives awards and brings poets and the public together in other ways.

The collection, to be called the Andrew W. Mellon International Collection of Contemporary Poetry, will be housed in the Carnegie Library. The intention is to gather together the works of major poets from all over the world in their original languages. Appropriate translations will be included where available.

It is all being made possible by a five-year grant from the A. W. Mellon Educational and Charitable Trust. The Mellon Collection, which the Poetry Forum calls the only one of its kind in the world, will be open to the use of scholars and students. Ernest Stefanik, editor of "John Berryman Studies," will be the bibliographer compiling it.

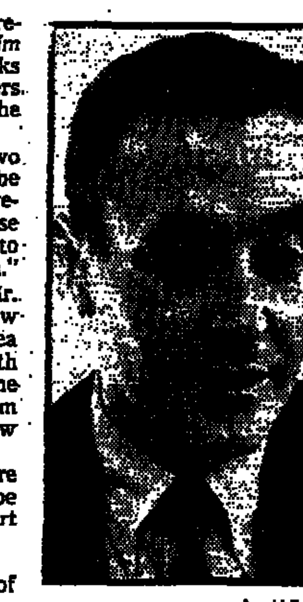
Thomas Tryon's new book, "Crowned Heads," is about



Arnold Eagle

Harold Brodkey
A long haul

Hollywood, and that is far from surprising. Mr. Tryon built a fairly substantial movie career as an actor in the 20 years he spent in Hollywood. He played the title character in Otto Preminger's "The Cardinal."

What is striking in the book, four interlocking novellas, is that the "crowned heads" emerge as devastating failures. They lack the integrity and moral qualities that make for wholesome human beings. These people who appear to have everything turn out to have nothing.

Asked the other day in the office of his publisher, Alfred A. Knopf, whether he intended this result and whether Hollywood to him stands for the rest of the country, the tall handsome actor, who shades and modulates his resonant voice with an actor's skill, said no.

"My plan was not to make an editorial comment or make a moral judgment. I just wanted to tell stories. I was just writing about four characters. There was no conscious effort to evolve a theory."

"But," he went on, "in 20 years I haven't seen anyone ennobled in Hollywood. There are no happy movie stars."

Referring to the violence that dots his tales, he remarked: "The Manson thing made an enormous impression. The house where the killing took place was right over the hill from where I was living. Celebrity and innocence make you vulnerable. It can cause your death."

But Hollywood, he emphasized, is not the entire country.

"Hollywood is a fantasy, and people there live out their fantasies, but it's not an American way of life."

His success in fiction ("The Other," "Harvest Home" and "Lady") came as a bit of surprise to him. He had not written seriously before writing "The Other," and he began writing that, he said, to have a movie property.

"Why did I sit down and write it as a story? It just seemed natural to me. I did not want to give it cinematic treatment."

Not only is his success a surprise to him, but also the fact that Knopf is his publisher.

"Just imagine," he said, "they're the publishers of Willa Cather."

He'd like to do a movie of Cather's "My Antonia," a book he admires extravagantly. But he won't return to the Camelot on the West Coast as an actor. He's doing the screenplay for one of the stories in "Crowned Heads"—"Bobbitt," which Michael Bennett will direct—and he would like to direct a movie himself. But there is no urgency. Writing is satisfying enough.

George Macbeth, a Scotsman with a solid reputation as a poet, will soon be presenting himself to a wider audience as a novelist. His book "The Samurai," published here by New American Library, is now in stores. His only previous venture into prose was a book about Scotland: part-autobiography, part-travel guide. But to Mr. Macbeth, the transition is not tremendous. "I see 'Samurai' exactly in line with a good deal of what I've been writing: poems," he told a reporter in London.

The novel has been described as lurid and sexy, a description the poet laughingly rejects. "It aims to present a number of situations involving sex and sometimes violence in the course of telling a dramatic story," he said.

He insisted he would never think of using a nom de plume. "I'm not ashamed of putting my name to it," he said. "It is a serious book, and my talent has gone into it in the same way, I hope, it goes into my poetry.

Mr. Macbeth has two more novels on the way. One has just been completed and is "in ways a much more poetic book" than "Samurai," he said. And he is working on a successor to "Samurai," with the same central female character, Cadbury.

Mobil Oil is conidering an idea—to provide a prize (in the form of a grant, traveling fellowship or the like) to an author in a Middle East country chosen by an independent jury. A translation grant, also provided by Mobil, would allow the author's work to appear in English, and the company would be willing to help an American publisher who showed interest in the writer but was hesitant about publishing a writer little known or completely unknown in the United States.

The writers of the Middle East, a Mobil representative said, are influencing people in an important part of the world, "and we should know more about them."

Weekend Gardeni[ng]

By RICHARD W. LANGER

For years I shied away from the gladiolus. It always reminded me of hospitals. But the very factors that make the gladiolus such a popular component of get-well bouquets are also what makes it ideal in the garden.

It is a dependable bloomer, it produces large showy flower spikes that make excellent cut flowers, it is easy to grow, easy to propagate and relatively free of pests and disease. About all it lacks is fragrance—and by growing Gladiolus tristis, a more diminutive graceful species than the common cut-flower variety, you can have even that.

Also, because the gladiolus is a tender plant from the tropics, it is set out in spring and early summer, after the glory of the tulips, daffodils and other bulbs that are set out in the fall has faded. Just when you begin to wish you'd planted more bulbs the previous year, you get a second chance.

Gladiolus are corms, incidentally, not bulbs. A corm is the enlarged base of a plant stem. It is homogeneous in structure. A bulb, such as that of a tulip, is actually a modified underground bud containing the whole incipient plant in miniature. Cut one in half, and you'll see.

Consider, before you pick the spot to plant gladiolus, that they are fairly large. For cut flowers they are often grown in simple rows the way vegetables are. And if you have room for them in your vegetable garden, they'll certainly add some life and color to it.

Planted in flower borders, gladiolus are showiest in clumps or groups like narcissus. Being upright and slender in habit, they should be planted five or more corms to a group, as otherwise they will lack the mass needed to produce a striking effect. Allow 6 to 8 inches between corms.

The planting spot selected for the gladiolus should receive a minimum of five hours of sun a day. Dig down a foot or more. The depth will affect what you do with the plants in the fall. Gladiolus are not fussy about their soil, but good soil preparation leads to healthier, more floriferous plants. After loosening the soil well, mix in liberally peat moss, compost, well-rotted manure or other fine organic matter. If your soil is very heavy clay, add sand as well; adequate drainage is important. A heaping teaspoonful of bone meal for each clump of corms will not only give an added boost to this summer's plant, but develop a larger corm for next summer as well. Vermiculite is a soil additive that has produced spectacular results for some growers.

Gladiolus corms should be a minimum of 1¾ inches in diameter. Smaller corms will save you money but cost you flowers. The corms should be firm. Any that are soft or hollow at the top should not be planted. They would mainly produce problems.

Place each corm concave end down and cover it with 3 to 4 inches of soil. If you leave a slight depression in the bed, you can add another inch or so of soil once the spearlike leaves have broken through the surface. This will help to keep the plant upright. Even so, if you grow the larger varieties, you will probably have to stake the plant for added support. Keep planting a new group of corms every two weeks till early August, and you'll have flowers well into fall.

Once a gladiolus plant is growing well, make sure the soil around it remains moist. Watering is particularly important during flowering and while the new corms are forming. This process begins after about a month of growth, when the first three leaves have formed. A side dressing of peat and aged manure at this stage is very beneficial though not essential.

As the gladiolus grows, keep watchful for premature yellowing or yellow streaking of the leaves. It is most apt to appear just before the first blossoms open, and is an indication of virus infection. Any plant showing the symptom must be destroyed immediately to prevent spread of the disease. But with luck you'll avoid it, particularly if you keep thrips and other pests under control.

Thrips are America's revenge on the Netherlands for Dutch elm disease. They are tiny black threadlike insects less than a 20th of an inch long. First discovered in Ohio in 1930, they've been eating their way across the gladiolus corms of the world ever since. The best cure is prevention. Spray the plants as soon as the leaves begin developing. If you want to stay away from chemical poisons, Roy Genders, one of Britain's most prominent gladiolus REASONS OF STATE. By Alejo Carpentier. Translated from the Spanish by Frances Partridge. 311 pages. Alfred A. Knopf. $10.

Alejo Carpentier is Cuban, a diplomat, a musicologist, former journalist and student of architecture, one of those Latin-American polymaths who, as if traumatized in their formative years by Proust and Joyce, insist on writing novels in the grand modernist tradition—nothing omitted, everything ambiguous—at a time when the rest of the West has decided to feel bad on a smaller scale. What works very well, however, for Vargas Llosa or Garcia Márquez or Carlos Fuentes, can be wearisome with an Asturias or a Carpentier.

Half of "Reasons of State" is, in fact, quite tedious. The time is early 20th century. The place is mostly Paris, where Mr. Carpentier currently represents his country. An aging Latin-American dictator addicted to rum and European culture considers his career in heavy-breathing flashbacks. It is a compound of machismo rubbish and lists, pages and pages of lists of objects and sensations.

These lists deal, as might be expected, with music, architecture, religion, war, sex, flora and fauna, even "the language of smells and tastes: brioches in their paper cases; madeleines, fluted like scallop-shells from Compostela, in square glass containers; Dubonnet's cat, the bersagliere on the Cinzano bottles, the gleaming pottery of the flasks of Dutch gin, the wooden ladders enclosed in bottles of marc brandy; the aroma of Amer Picón—something between orange peel and tar." They do not, for the most part, advance the cause of narrative or character. It is as though the novel were an adding machine without a total bar. A kind of prose stagflation results.

The other half of "Reasons of State" consists of set pieces, many of them marvelous: a betrayal here, a massacre there, a cabinet meeting and a general strike. Mr. Carpentier has a fine eye and a fine ear for rhetoric, whether of French Academicians or Latin-American politicians. When at last the Head of State is overthrown, with the help of American marines, while "The Student" (communism) waits in the wings, "The Professor" (Christian Social Democracy) takes over with "a vertiginous flood of words launched to the four winds":

". . . moving from Morgan's Bank to Plato's Republic, from the Logos to foot-and-mouth disease, from General Motors to Ramakrishna, coming at last to the conclusion—or at least some understood it thus—that from the Mystic Marriage between the Eagle and the Condor, and as a result of the fertilization of our inexhaustible soil by foreign investment, our America would be transformed by the vigorous Technology that would come to us from the North [and] by the light of our own innate spirituality, a synthesis would be born between the Vedanta, the Popol-Vuh and the parables of Christ-the-first-socialist . . ."

And the ex-Head of State goes into Parisian exile, wondering whether he might have stayed in power if he had built some low-income housing. When he dies, he will be buried in the cemetery of Montparnasse, near Baudelaire and Porfirio Diaz. And, alas, we will know no more about him than we did on opening this book.

JOHN LEONARD

Novels for Our Times

By RICHARD R. LINGEMAN

THE STAR-SPANGLED CONTRACT. By Jim Garrison. 372 pages. McGraw-Hill $8.95.

In the opening scene of Jim Garrison's new novel, shots are fired at a figure in a limousine, and for a brief moment we are wrenched back in memory to Dealey Plaza and the death of President Kennedy. Because Jim Garrison, the author, is also Jim Garrison the former New Orleans District Attorney, who began an investigation into the assassination that many thought was in itself a fictional scenario, the reader might well expect that he or she is in for another assassination-conspiracy theory, smuggled to him in fictional guise.

But that is not Mr. Garrison's game at all. Although his novel breathes conspiracy through every pore and there is a Presidential assassination in it, there are no direct parallels to the Kennedy murder. The hero, a tough former Green Baret named Colin McFerrin, is simply the obligatory thriller character caught up in a funhouse-mirror world of things that are not what they seem, in which friends become enemies and enemies become dead, as fast as McFerrin can stomp, garrote, break necks or otherwise manage it. The enemy, it soon develops, consists of certain factions in the American intelligence community—"the new and invisible fifth estate, a dimension of government yet undiscovered. . . ."

Mr. Garrison's premise is not unduly farfetched—indeed it is the stuff of our waking nightmares these days. The problem is not with reality: it is with Mr. Garrison's fiction. That is, his novel lacks the tautness, the menacing atmosphere and the characters worth caring about that good thrillers have—indeed the seamy ordinariness that helps set the scene, cast the spell. There are some saving graces—notably Mr. Garrison's occasional talent for patches of baroque Southern courthouse-square dialogue, and his knowledgeability of the wonderful paranoic world of intelligence. But the novel seems jerkily tapped in and out, like a wire-service story coming in in chunks of copy on the teletype.

I HEAR AMERICA SWINGING. By Peter DeVries. 211 pages. Boston: Little, Brown. $7.95.

Transplant to Middle City, Iowa, the "swinger" mores, the latest countercultural kitsch and all the other specimens of American avant-gardism, and if the author of the book is Peter DeVries, you can be sure he'll be off and punning. It seems there's trouble keeping 'em down on the farm out Middle City way now that they've seen "Deep Throat," and American Gothic has become American à gogo. Mr. DeVries's hero is thrust into this maelstrom of culture shock in the role of a marriage counselor with a Ph.D. in literature (it seems his thesis on divorce was turned down by the sociology department, despite his plea that it was really an "antithesis," making him the "Ionesco of sociology", he thereupon thriftily submitted it to the English department as an anti-novel).

Bumpers, a bemusedly permissive type, gingerly immerses himself in the roiled waters of the local yokels' lives, taking on as his first case a farmer, Herkimer (Heck) Brown, who has changed his life style after falling in with a fast set that drinks coffee after, not with, meals. Heck is neglecting the family acres, which he's renamed Pretty Pass, and taken to lollygagging about in e.e. cummings sweatshirts. As a husbandman, he's a flop (when somebody tries to talk crops with him, he says airily, "Alfalfa is démodé"), and as a husband, he isn't so hot either, a literal reading of the Bible having turned him on to concubinage.

As material, this is not exactly newminted, and the satire is stretched at times; still Mr. DeVries keeps the puns, gags, allusions and word play bouncing like a ping-pong ball on a water-jet, while maintaining an undercurrent of serious comment on our times. You don't laugh yourself silly at a DeVries book; you chuckle yourself a little wiser.

EATERS OF THE DEAD. By Michael Crichton. 183 pages. Knopf. $6.95.

After steeping himself in Victoriana in "The Great Train Robbery" the last time out, Michael Crichton turns to Vikingiana for "Eaters of the Dead." Mr. Crichton leans heavily on an actual travel journal by Ibn Fadlan, an Arab from Baghdad who traveled through Turkey and Russia in the year 922.

Mr. Crichton involves Ibn Fadlan with a group of brawny, wenching Norsemen he has met up with at a camp along the Volga. It seems that a Norse king is troubled by creatures known as wendols—ugly hairy things that eat the dead—and his son begs Buliwyf, leader of the Norsemen, to break off his own travels and return for a sort of police action. Promised that his name will surely be in the sagas if he undertakes this heroically difficult mission, Buliwyf agrees and enlists 11 companions plus Ibn Fadlan, who is press-ganged.

What had been a Marco Poloesque travel journal shifts plot gears into a sort of remake of "The Magnificent Seven," as Buliwyf's terrible 13 busy themselves fortifying the King's demesne and ultimately engaging their horrendous foe. Mr. Crichton's story jogs along smoothly and mindlessly, narrated in an archaic style meant to suggest the original, consisting mainly of a lot of verilies strewn about (he even says "Verily it is true that...").

He also appends some mock-scholarly footnotes—to pad out his rather slim tale, truth to tell, but further confusing the reader as to just what is verily Viking and what is verily Crichton.

Bridge: Mayfair Club Gets a New Home Under Roth's Proprietorship

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

One of the world's most famous bridge clubs moved to a new home earlier this week. The Mayfair, which was long the preserve of the late Harry Fishbein, has been transferred by its present proprietor, Alvin Roth, to 220 East 57th Street, where he has provided luxurious accommodations for bridge and backgammon on a membership basis. He promises a series of activities tailor-made for the requirements of his members.

Roth is never at a loss for a bridge hand, and promptly produced the diagramed deal from Monday's Eastern mixed-team championship when asked for one during his opening cocktail partly Tuesday. It illustrated his ability to read the opponent's distribution, and produced a groan from his partner, Barbara Rappaport. "I know what this one's going to be," she muttered resignedly.

Both sides were vulnerable. The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 N.T.	2 ◇	Pass	4 ♡
Pass	Pass	Pass

West led the club queen.

East's opening one spade bid in the third seat temporarily silenced Roth. When Mrs. Rappaport then bid two diamonds over one no trump, she showed a red two-suiter by partnership agreement. The theoretical justification for this is that a one-suit hand would normally be worth an opening bid or a jump overcall, so a simple overcall by a passed hand can be given a special meaning.

Roth jumped to four hearts, and after the lead of the club queen he searched the dummy in vain for a fifth heart. Having said what he thought of the dummy in a few well-chosen words he proceeded to make the contract. He ducked clubs twice, and when East took the ace on the second round he shifted to a low spade. Roth put out the king successfully and played three rounds of hearts. West won with the queen and played the spade queen, ruffed in the dummy.

Roth could now see these cards.

East was known to have begun with a doubleton ace of clubs and three hearts headed by the jack. It was unlikely that he had begun with six spades, for he would probably have chosen a weak two bid. That meant his distribution was 5-3-3-2, and it was safe to assume that he held the diamond queen. Without that card he would probably have passed. With that card West would probably have raised to two spades instead of selecting the more discouraging one no trump response.

So Roth ran the diamond jack successfully, led to the ace and returned to dummy with a club lead. He made the contract, won a sheaf of international match points and resumed his acerbic comments on the bidding.

THE DEVIL FINDS WORK. An Essay. 122 pages. Dial. $6.95.

SO JAMES BALDWIN is still here, still pursuing us, a ghost of 60's past. Even though he long ago became unfashionable, long ago wore out his welcome even in the black revolution (because he dared to believe that whites and blacks could love each other despite everything), he goes on jumping up and down and pointing like the man in the old Philadelphia Inquirer ads. Now, in his latest work of nonfiction, "The Devil Finds Work," he is here to tell us of his experiences at the movies from the time as a child when he discovered with gratitude that Bette Davis had "pop eyes" like his, to the time when as an adult he was terrified by the banality of the evil represented by the devil in "The Exorcist." And he is pursuing us, predictably enough, with the conclusion that Hollywood is a machine designed to perpetuate certain racist notions (though this is putting it a little more bluntly and a little less constructively than Mr. Baldwin actually does).

Jerry Bauer
James Baldwin

Now, one can easily smother "The Devil Finds Work" with an avalanche of quibbles, not least among them that the news that Hollywood reflects American racial biases is not especially astonishing. One can fault Mr. Baldwin for his mannered and elliptical prose style, which leads him to overelaborate certain rather obvious points. (It takes him several paragraphs to explain that the black men played by Sidney Poitier in "In the Heat of the Night" and "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" had to be supermen, hence virtual freaks, in order to be treated by whites as equals.) Moreover, he makes ponderous what any child could probably tell us: "This is, perhaps, a very subtle argument, but black men do not have the same reason to hate white men as white men have to hate blacks."

One can accuse Mr. Baldwin of oversimplifying history. While warming up to dissect a McCarthy era film called "My Son, John" (with Helen Hayes, Van Heflin, Robert Walker and Dean Jagger), Mr. Baldwin refers sardonically to the "miserable, incontestably inferior, rice-eating gooks [who] refused to come to heel" in Korea, as if the United States's involvement there had simply been an exercise in repressive bigotry. It may very well have been that, but it was also many other complex things.

Even T. E. Lawrence's campaigns in Arabia can be reduced to a white conspiracy against blacks, Mr. Baldwin tries to persuade us in his discussion of David Lean's "Lawrence of Arabia". ("It would appear that [the English] people need endless corroboration of their worth," observes Mr. Baldwin in an aside that will leave historians breathless, "and the tragedy of their history has been their compulsion to make the world their mirror, and this to a degree not to be equaled in the history of any other people—and with a success, if that is the word, not to be equaled in the history of any other people.")

Finally, one might argue that the American film industry has not been so much conspiratorial on the subject of blacks as shallow and incompetent on the subject of everything. Mr. Baldwin may argue otherwise, using as evidence his personal experience of trying to write an honest screenplay for "The Autobiography of Malcolm X." Still, while he may be quite accurate in his contention that films such as "The Defiant Ones" and "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" are bad because they distort the reality of black-white relations, I myself found both films more memorable for having been just plain bad.

Thus, one can pick away at Mr. Baldwin's essay almost endlessly. But is there any important point to be made by such an exercise? Not really. Everyone has heard the arguments before. In this particular case it seems more worthwhile to ignore the two-thirds of Mr. Baldwin's book that is wrongheaded and to attend to the one-third that is right. And what is right about "The Devil Finds Work" can't be described in detail beyond saying that it is James Baldwin testifying honestly to his own experience at the movies. It is his experience, and as such it either makes us see a point of view we are unlikely to have seen before (if we happen to be white) or confirms a way of looking at things for which we are unlikely to have gotten public affirmation (if we happen to be black).

Besides, I can't help feeling it is only fair now to attend to what Mr. Baldwin is saying. There used to be a time when we would hang on every breath he expired—a time when perhaps we overrated him. Then, probably out of embarrassment at our overenthusiasm, we started ignoring him completely—in short, underrated him. Now, if for no other reason than balance, maybe it's time simply to rate him accurately. Not that it will matter much to him whether we do or not. Whatever the consequences, he will keep on testifying, "keep on keeping on," as the expression goes. And this, too, is a reason for paying him respect.

Purchase To Hold Rustic Fair

Purchase, N.Y., an affluent Westchester community that has been fighting a running battle with urbanization, will invoke the memory of a more rustic past tomorrow when it holds its annual country fair, a 30-year tradition. Fair time is from 11 A.M. to 5 P.M.

The fairgrounds, located on the Manhattanville College campus, will be studded with the usual array of rides, raffles, craft exhibits, a bluegrass country band, a performing chimpanzee named Mr. Jiggs and a performing karate expert named Master Kang.

But what adds special zest to the Purchase County Fair for browsers, collectors and buyers with a sharp eye is the fair's white elephant sale which invariably includes at least a few castoffs from the community's large estates and homes that are in the $100,000 to $350,000 bracket.

This year, for instance, the sale will include a set of six high-backed solid oak chairs from the University of Louisville that once may have graced a very august faculty room and now might be adapted to a very large dining room.

Lois Perez, one of the volunteers at the fair said: "Sometimes they come in with fabulous stuff, like old quilts. You never know what you're going to get." One thing you can get this year is an enormous black imitation leather booth donated by a local bar. You can also walk off with anything from a playpen to assorted bric-a-brac at the sale, which will be held in the campus's Kennedy Building. Booths in this building will also offer an array of books, records, clothing, toys and jewelry.

For those interested in more immediate gratification, food outlets on the fairgrounds will offer sausage and pepper wedges, hot dogs and soda, all supplemented by a pantry sale enjoying the blessings of 200 community cooks.

The fairgrounds, clustered around the Kennedy Building, will offer games of skill and chance, and there will be rides—on a miniature train, on ponies, and for footsore grownups, a free bus between the parking area and the fairgrounds.

Proceeds from the event will benefit the Purchase Community House, a focal point for the area.

Purchase has been an inviting site for large corporations that have established corporate parks and office buildings in the once-exclusive community. In order to discourage these inroads, the community tried vainly to secede from the town of Harrison, N.Y., two years ago. Nevertheless, Purchase has still maintained some of its rural traditions, not the least among which is its annual fair.

Play About Casement

The Riverdale Contemporary Theater will present "Sir Roger Casement, Traitor," a new play by George Hickenlooper, today and tomorrow, at the Riverdale Neighborhood House, 5521 Mosholu Parkway, the Bronx, at 8:30 P.M. Sidney Green directed a cast that includes Frank Copeland, Susan Habachy, Jeffrey J. Wallach and Philip Meranus.

ADLER ON HOHNER

The harmonica is a versatile instrument that can be used for more than the best of Stephen Foster. Larry Adler, who made this point long ago, will make it again today in a concert sponsored by the Turtle Bay Music School of New York City. Mr. Adler will be the guest star of the performance at 4 P.M. at the Great Hall, Marymount Manhattan College, 221 East 71st Street. He will share top billing with Cham-Ber Huang, a classical harmonica virtuoso who heads the school's harmonica department and also designed a new Hohner harmonica to be used on the program. The two artists will be backed by a harmonica cadre of 25 students and Hohner employees. Admission is free (first-come, first-served), but the school would appreciate a $3 donation for its scholarship fund at the door.

THE JEWISH EAST SIDE

The Educational Alliance dates back to the early years of immigration and a Lower East Side that used to be Jewish but is now more black and Chinese and Spanish-speaking, and yet is still served by the Alliance. Today, though, the Alliance, 197 East Broadway (GR 5-6200), and two dozen other Lower East Side organizations are going to take a long look back with a big affair called "East Side Jews Proud of Their American Heritage." It will run from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. on East Broadway between Jefferson and Clinton Streets (in case of rain, activities move into the Alliance). Harry Golden and other East Siders, including politicians and artists, will be on hand. You will be able to see the films, hear tapes of recollections, sit in on a writers' panel (3:30 P.M.), go on synagogue visits (all during the day), take walking tours of Jewish landmarks (11 A.M., 3:30 P.M.), hear Yiddish entertainment (2 to 4 P.M.) and other things. Free, but there are things to buy, badges and food and baubles that will defray expenses.

HOUSING ORCHESTRA

The New York City Housing Authority Symphony Orchestra has been raising the roofs around town for four years. Its concerts are free, usually, and its musicians include professionals, Housing Authority employees and even tenants. At 7 tonight, the 75-piece orchestra plays a benefit for itself at Alice Tully Hall, Lincoln Center, under the direction of Karl Hampton Porter. Works by Bernstein, Joplin, Anderson, Mahler, Griffes and Johnson-Porter. Admission: $3, $5, $10, $15; students and over-65's, $2. Proceeds will help carry the orchestra through its fifth summer season. Information: 433-7366.

KITE FLYING IN PARK

Go fly a kite today in Central Park, where you'll have plenty of company. It's the third annual New York City Kite Festival, from 1 to 5 P.M. on the Sheep Meadow, near the West 67th Street entrance to the park. There will be all kinds of kites: box, delta, parafoil, dragon (45-footers), Indian Fighter and so on. Sponsored by Go Fly a Kite, the store at 1434 Third Avenue, and the city's Parks, Cultural Affairs and Recreation Department. The first 250 kite fliers younger than 12 showing up will get free kites. Prizes for highest flier, smallest flier, most beautiful kite, most original kite and most kites on one string. Demonstrations, a place to get your kite repaired and a stand to sell kites. There should only be a stiff breeze. Information: 988-8885.

BICYCLES ON BROADWAY

There has been a bicycle surge in the region, and Transportation Alternatives is trying to make the point that cycling beats motoring, if not in time (although maybe in that, too), at least in terms of health and nonpollution. Today, at noon, the organization is planning a big wheel, led by such big wheels as Senator Jacob K. Javits and Dustin Hoffman, from Columbus Circle, at noon, down Broadway to the Battery, where there will be a rally, including performances by avant-garde musicians (playing bicycles, yet, including spokes and frames), folk singers, unicyclists and even talkers. All free. Bicyclists from other boroughs and uptown Manhattan will meet in their boroughs earlier to join the main procession (check out meeting points by calling 425-3025).

Port Washington

By GEORGE VECSEY

WITHIN an hour of Manhattan, a visitor can tour a Roaring Twenties estate, enjoy boating, fishing, bicycling, art galleries, antiques and possibly a free film festival or concert — with some atmosphere of far-away resorts.

True, Port Washington might not appear so thrilling to a cosmopolite as the beaches of Cape Cod, the shops of Southampton or the back roads of the Berkshires. But it has one massive advantage: You can slip into Port Washington very quickly and convince yourself you have traveled more than 20 miles.

Port Washington is the general name for several villages and unincorporated areas jutting into Long Island Sound—Sands Point is the elegant tip. The area has hills and bays and quiet woods, and even a couple of gentle creeks and ponds.

But it is not exactly Walton's Mountain, either: It is a school district of 30,000 residents. John Cassavetes, a native son, used Port Washington as a backdrop for his film "Husbands," about a couple of commuters on a spree. But on the right day, watching the sailboats glisten on Manhasset Bay, or chatting with a fisherman along the dock, you may have trouble believing that Manhattan is really looming on the skyline.

Tomorrow the hill on lower Main Street will be jammed with more than 100 craftsmen plus games and food booths as Port celebrates its annual Harbor Day, the traditional opener to three months of outdoor living. At the same time, the Public Library, 245 Main Street, will display camping gear and skills both indoors and outdoors.

How to Get There

By car, the prettiest route is by Northern State Parkway to Shelter Rock Road, go north past large estates, turn left on Northern Boulevard, right on Plandome Road through Manhasset, follow signs to Port Washington. When you pass between Leeds Pond and Manhasset Bay, you're almost there. A more direct route is the Long Island Expressway to Exit 36, north for several miles to Main Street.

By train, the Port Washington Line is the best branch on the Long Island Rail Road (no change at Jamaica)—43 minutes from Penn Station. The off-hour fare is $1.75 each way and the Sunday rate is half fare —$2.30 round trip.

Background

The harbor and flatlands became an important shipping and farming center in Colonial times, and during the Revolution the loyalty was to the New England patriots who slipped across the Sound at night. Oyster farming brought settlers early in the 19th century. Later, waves of Italian immigrants extracted sand and gravel. On the eastern shore, there are barren sand pits that look more like strip mines than suburbia.

The Long Island Railroad crossed the Manhasset Valley in 1898, bringing Port within an easy commute of the city. Before World War II, Pan American operated its first clippers to Bermuda and Europe from Manhasset Bay; a plaque on the town dock commemorates that brief moment.

Exploring

A pleasant approach to Port is by way of Plandome Road, with Manhasset Bay on the left—changing colors and textures daily, depending on weather, tide and season. Before stopping in town, you might want to continue along Shore Road into Sands Point, the lordly "East Egg" in Fitzgerald's "The Great Gatsby." There are still traces of that era today—courtyards, carriage houses, servants' homes —but some of the land has been subdivided.

The best way to enjoy the area is by bicycle. It is much easier to dawdle in front of a lovely estate or a private beach if you are cycling. Carry a bicycle on your car—since you can't rent them here and they are not permitted on the railroad—and disembark at the Soundview Shopping Center on Shore Road. Then push your bike up the long grade of Sands Point Road, until you reach the quiet woods that lead to waterfront homes with views of the city and Westchester. The traffic is light, but you must be cautious about drivers who do not respect cyclists.

For walking, the best section is lower Main Street, clustered with a dozen art and antique shops. There are also many nautical supply stores where you can buy a drop line or a yacht, depending how the salt air affects you.

No. 1 Attraction

The best single "tourist" item is probably Falaise, the estate of the late Harry F. Guggenheim, now a Nassau County Museum. The 210-acre setting, sloping toward Hempstead Harbor, evokes the splendor of the 20's. Captain Guggenheim built his mansion in 1923, taking his inspiration from Norman architecture. ("Falaise" is the French word for "cliff", and is also the Normandy birthplace of William the Conqueror.)

A latter-day conqueror, Charles F. Lindbergh, was a frequent guest of Captain Guggenheim, and wrote his book "We," there. Colonel Lindbergh later donated his book collection to Falaise, transporting it in his station wagon, now permanently parked there. The home has several valuable art pieces including several Spanish panels, a Gauguin statue and sculpture by Giacometti.

Please note that Falaise may only be visited by a prearranged tour at $2 a person. Tours are held Sunday through Wednesday but a telephone call is a necessity —(516) 883-1610.

There is also a Port Washington Historical Society in a Colonial home on Port Washington Boulevard (516) 365-9074.

The Arts

One of the most stimulating libraries anywhere is the modernistic building with its huge picture windows overlooking the harbor. Air-conditioned, it is a lovely place to spend a hot day. It is open from 9 A.M. to 9 P.M. weekdays, 9 to 1 on Saturday and closed Sundays during the summer.

There is always an art exhibition at this library: This month, Max Weber is featured in the downstairs gallery while top photographs from the Witkin Gallery are displayed upstairs. And there is a full schedule of children's activities. For further information, call (516) 883-4400.

Port also has three young cooperative art galleries that have received good notices and compare favorably with those in SoHo. By happy coincidence, all three are planning special receptions: Susan Zises and Joan Miller at the Graphic Eye, 111 Main Street, today from 7:30 to 10 P.M.; Linda Cohen and Woodroofe at the Central Hall Gallery, 52 Main Street on Sunday from 1 to 5 P.M. and Jean Forino at B. J. Spoke Gallery, 402 Main Street, on Sunday from 1 to 5 P.M. (all three are open Wednesday through Sunday).

Waterfront

One of the main reasons for a trip to this area is to enjoy the boating on either Manhasset Bay (on the west side) or Hempstead Harbor (on the east).

Fishing can be exceptional when the bluefish are running in schools: the water churns and bubbles with indiscriminate gluttons who will attack their young or a lure or a fisherman's finger. A professional fisherman says the flounder are better this year than in the last 20.

All the gear can be purchased at Harbor Hardware, 300 Main Street, a few steps from the town dock. The fishing tips are free. Rowboats can be rented for $8 a day from Louie's Shore Restaurant, 397 Main Street.

On Hempstead Harbor, at the foot of East Shore Road, Bill's Rowboat Place will rent a 6-horsepower motor and boat for $19.50 a day—(516) 883-1082. He also sells tackle.

Sailors can rent boats from Steadman Sailboats next to Louie's Dock (516) 883-0505. Their lowest rate is $18 for a 19-foot Mariner on weekdays. You can also rent a 40-foot Morgan for $850 a week. Steadman will also arrange for sailing lessons for as little as $10 a person or a moonlight sail, or put you in touch one of Port's many qualified skippers who could take you to New Rochelle or Bermuda.

Many people take boats to Port Washington from other ports. For a brief visit, they can tie up at Louie's Dock for 25 cents a foot (free if they eat at the restaurant). Overnight visitors may prefer

TV WEEKEND

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

Friday

At 10:30 tonight, Channel 50 is offering something new with "Mark of Jazz," a series of half hours produced by station WHYY in Philadelphia. The productions are modest (i.e., low-budgeted) but rewarding (i.e., good talent). One featuring Chris Connor simply leaves the singer and her first-rate backup music trio to several very effective numbers, from the latest in pop to a Cole Porter medley. The series began with Maynard Ferguson. It includes Mabel Mercer. Tonight's guest is Ramsay Lewis. The mix, obviously, is odd, but the results are very pleasant.

Channel 13 is going for fund-raising with an auction on camera these days, but the public-TV reruns can be found on some of the UHF channels. "The Tribal Eye" is doing another turn on Channel 25. Tonight at 9, the cultural-anthropological survey covers the Incas of Peru and the Aztecs of Mexico.

Saturday

The "third jewel" in racing's triple crown will be displayed on CBS at 5 P.M. The Belmont Stakes will feature three-year-old thoroughbreds competing for a purse estimated at $200,000. Post time will be at about 5:30. Jack Whitaker and Heywood Hale Broun, among others, will inform and entertain the viewers until then.

At 10 P.M., CBS is offering the warm-weather relief of a new series: "Dinah and Her Best New Friends." Dinah is Dinah Shore, who apparently has discovered some eternal-youth pill. She looks more glamorous now than when she was lavishly throwing kisses for Chevrolet and the U.S.A. many years ago.

Her best new friends constitute a repertory company of performers still relatively new to television, a kind of collection that Broadway used to put together in its "New Faces" revues. Dinah's friends are not as bright, talented, funny (or tasteless)

The New York Times/Doral F.Holway

Dinah Shore

as Chevy Chase and team on NBC's "Saturday Night." But they are trying, pleasantly and amiably enough.

Mike Neun does a low-keyed, guitar-strumming routine about being the only beer drinker at a dope party, about unwittingly smoking pot and then progressing to Tums and Contac cold tablets. Leland Palmer and Diana Canova sing nicely, and get to a version of "Flings" with guest star Jean Stapleton. Mike Preminger, from the Bronx, threatens to sing a medley from "Ben Hur." And Bruce Kimmel sings one song—nicely of course. As host, Miss Shore is attractive, charming and, of course, glamorous.

Saturday night at 11:30 does not always mean Chevy Chase and his team. Once a month, the 90-minute slot is given over to NBC News, specifically the magazine called "Weekend." The executive producer is Reuven Frank. The host, sometimes correspondent and always extensive writer is Lloyd Dobyns. Winner of a Peabody Award this year, "Weekend" is an offbeat, clever and generally appealing mixture of light (though sometimes groaning) humor and news, both light and heavy.

This week's collection features the story, acquired from the British Broadcasting Corporation, of two men who were "exiled to Coventry" for answering emergency ambulance call during a one-day strike ordered by their union. It is a study in union militancy, humanitarianism, inflexibility, and inimitable British ways.

Another piece goes to Thailand to look at the expanding market for adopting children. As birth control and abortion gain acceptance in richer countries, the orphanages and unwanted children of poorer countries supply an abundance of material for more advanced folk wanting children. The relationship between supply and demand has taken a new twist.

The centerpiece this week, though, is a long investigative essay, produced by Anthony Potter, that traces the traffic of cocaine from the coca fields of Peru and Bolivia to the streets of New York. The price of coca leaves (one ton is required to produce one kilo of pure paste) has increased 1,500 percent in the last two years as cocaine has become the "elitist" or "status" drug in the United States. Mr. Potter supplements his essay with some intriguing history, featuring Sigmund Freud, Sherlock Holmes and the early days of Coca-Cola.

Sunday

Once again, "Camera Three," on CBS at 11 A.M., *comes to the interesting res-*cue of a rather drab overall schedule, this time with the second and final half-hour of "Roger Corman: King of the B's." Produced by Eric Orner, this portrait explores the phenomenon of Roger Corman, who has directed 49 films (beginning with "Five Guns West" in 1954 at age 28) and has produced more than 200 films.

The Corman signature has been a combination of incredibly low budgets and impossibly short shooting schedules. He has ranged from "Attack of the Crab Monsters" to the famous series of Poe tales starring Vincent Price. He provided a beginning for famous actors (Jack Nicholson, Bruce Dern), writers (Robert Towne) and directors (Francis Ford Coppola, Peter Bogdanovich and Martin Scorsese).

*In recent years, Mr. Cor*man has been dabbling in quality and art with the distribution of Bergman's "Cries and Whispers," Fellini's "Amarcord" and Truffaut's "The Story of Adele H." But this Camera Three installment successfully distills the fascinating world of formula, of sex and violence, of untried talent and low salaries, of shameless hard-sell (the cover-girl models "may be overexposed but never underdeveloped") that have made Roger Corman one of the more intriguing products of Hollywood.

Executive Shuffle in the City's Big Stores

By ISADORE BARMASH

In the last two years new faces have replaced old ones in the top executive suites of most of New York's big stores.

If the erratic pace of New York City's retail sales has been a spur to the changes in top management of the city's retailers, the sales results for the month of May indicate the possibility of further changes. Last month, seven of the city's largest department stores had a sales decline of 7.6 percent, the biggest monthly sales drop in more than a decade.

Early this week, the latest change in top retail management was announced—the *appointment of Herbert Solomon as presi*dent of Ohrbach's Inc. He succeeds Howard P. Goldberg, who resigned in March in a policy dispute with the owners. Mr. Sol*omon, a senior vice president of Abraham* & Straus, will be Ohrbach's fourth president in seven years.

In another recent change, Saks Fifth Avenue appointed Robert J. Suslow as its third president in three and a half years.

In all, nine of the city's 12 largest retail companies have changed either their chair*man or president—or both. The nine retail*ers are Macy's, Gimbels, Abraham & Straus, Bergdorf Goodman, Saks Fifth Avenue, Bonwit Teller, Ohrbach's, B. Altman and Lord & Taylor.

This wave of top management changes in the New York retailing field has raised questions in many corporate suites. Why the unusually large number of changes in one field and in one geographical area? Is the volatile retail business more hazardous for executives than other fields? And why the unusually large compensation offers to lure new talent?

"The difficulties of the national economy and of New York in particular have led to some of the top executive changes in stores," observed Herbert T. Mines, president of Business Careers Inc., a management recruiter specializing in retailing. "And when things turn tough in the economy, it is natural to question whether those at the top are right for the job."

But Mr. Mines said that some of the recent top shifts would have occurred because of ownership changes regardless of "qualitative reasons." As often as not, he explained, new owners tend to seek a redirection of a business they acquire and prefer to have new people implement it.

But why the big cash offers that have suddenly raised recruitment salary levels for top retailers? Retail industry observers point out that huge salaries were not necessary in the past. So why now? What lured executives to new retailing jobs in the past but doesn't seem to do the trick nowadays unless the financial package is sweetened?

Most observers say that the swinging door has been pushed by bottom-line problems and by the continuing trend of lower retail sales in the city and metropolitan area than in the country. The city's economic difficulties, merchants assert, have caused retail business in New York to rise less than inflation and have caused the number of sales transactions to fall.

Also, because most big New York stores are flagships whose operational patterns are usually reflected directly at branch stores elsewhere, the city stores' erratic

NEW-CAR SALES UP 17% IN MAY PERIOD; 8TH MONTHLY GAIN

Results Less Than Expected but No Softening Is Seen in Annual Selling Rate

Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, June 3—Domestic new car sales increased 17 percent in the final third of May, company figures showed today. Sales were lower than expected but the results still meant the automobile industry completed in May its eighth straight month of sharply higher sales.

For the full month, sales were up 37 percent from May 1975. Although analysts saw nothing in the lower-than-forecast results to indicate the industry's sales were softening, they noted that the annual selling rate had dropped to 8.7 million units in May from 9 million in April and 9.3 million in March.

Ward's Automotive Reports, the industry's statistical service, said an analysis of the figures showed such intermediate cars as the Oldsmobile *Cutlass strengthened their posi*tion as the most popular size, with the market still off for subcompacts such as the Chevrolet Vega.

Double Shifts Planned

Full-size models also were selling well, with the General Motors and the Chrysler Corporations planning to add second work shifts at two big car plants this month.

G.M. reported overall sales up 21 percent for the period, well below what had been expected, and up 44 percent for the full month. The May performance pushed its market share to 55.5 percent from 52.6 percent last year.

The Ford Motor Company sales were up 13 percent for the period, also less than expected, and up 30 percent for the month. But its market share dropped to 23.9 percent from 27.3 percent a year ago. Chrysler said sales were up 29 percent for the period and 42 percent for the month, putting its market share at 15.7 percent compared with 15.0 last year.

The American Motors Corporation, which specializes in the kinds of small, economy cars people are not buying, had [illegible] closed this week. It reported sales off 40 percent for the May 21-31 period and 23 percent for the month. Its market share dropped to 2.9 percent from 5.1 percent.

Import sales for May were off only 3 percent from last year, indicating the foreign cars' sales decline may be easing, although sales are still off 15 percent from last year. The imports accounted for 13.9 percent of May sales compared with 18.5 percent a year ago.

Toyota, the best-selling import, reported record May sales

Margin Surprising —Passage of Bill Is Probable Monday

By EILEEN SHANAHAN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—The Senate broke a filibuster today against a major antitrust bill and moved toward passage of the measure, probably on Monday.

The vote by which the filibuster by conservative Republicans and Southern Democrats was ended was 67 to 22, far more than the 60 votes that are required to shut off debates under the Senate cloture rule. The margin surprised everyone who had been following the issue.

The antitrust measure, if finally enacted, would constitute the most substantial change in the antitrust laws in more than a dozen years.

Three Major Sections

The bill has three major sections:

¶It would authorize state at*torneys general to bring suits* for money damages against violators of the antitrust laws on behalf of all the citizens of the state.

¶It would greatly broaden the amount of information that the Justice Department could require private parties to pro*duce, under what amounts to* a sort of civil subpoena, as part of its antitrust investigations.

¶It would give the Government added powers to keep mergers from actually being consummated while the Government is deciding whether to file suit against them and, in some cases, while the suits are being tried.

The antitrust bill has been vigorously opposed by many businesses, including more than 150 of the 200 largest corporations.

The Ford Administration originally endorsed most aspects of the bill but President Ford subsequently withdrew his support for the anti-merger section and the section authorizing the state attorneys general to bring antitrust damage suits.

The merger section was particularly fought by investment bankers, who often act as agents in putting mergers together and who felt that delaying mergers would be the same as prohibiting them in many instances.

The other sections of the bill have been fought by a wide spectrum of businesses.

As the Senate opened debate at noon today, the betting was that the filibuster would not be broken, largely because of a rather heavy absenteeism among liberal Democrats.

The cloture motion prevailed, however, because almost all of the Senate's moderates, of both parties, voted for it.

There was much talk in the Senate cloakroom and galleries that the real reason why the cloture motion passed had to do with the chief sponsor of the antitrust bill, Senator Philip A. Hart the Michigan Democrat who is chairman of the Senate antitrust subcommittee.

Senator Hart, a man of gentle demeanor, is one of the most popular members of the Senate. He is retiring at the end of this year, and he has cancer. Thus there was a general opinion around the Senate that many members had voted to close off debate "to let Hart have one that he's worked so hard on." Senator Hart has not previously been able to get a major antitrust bill through the Senate during the dozen years of his chairmanship.

The fact that the bill's cosponsor was the Senate Republican leader, Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, was also seen as a significant element in the

Camera Press

Among the industrial areas in which France is expanding its control, mainly by buying up American interests, are computers, in which Honeywell is now a minority partner in the Bull operations. Other areas include nuclear energy, in which Westinghouse is involved, and telecommunications, in which I.T.T. plays a large role.

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH

Special to The New York Times

PARIS—There is a new word in France—Francisation. It means Frenchification of industry.

It has been developing in computers, with Honeywell Inc. of Minneapolis now a minority partner in the French computer industry. Westinghouse is now in a similar position in nuclear energy. And the International Telephone and Telegraph Company has been persuaded to sell one of its two main telecommunications subsidiaries here.

The process has been under way for some months. President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing: building on a policy shaped initially in Gaullist days, has successively brought high-technology industries in France under majority French ownership.

While enlarging their lexicon, the French, mainly by buying up American interests, have been expanding control of companies in such fields as telecommunications, nuclear energy and computers in pursuit of the Gaullist dream of economic independence.

It is a policy that is less stridently nationalistic than the late President Charles de *Gaulle's costly moves to re*verse what was then called the technological gap.

To try to break what he called American domination, General de Gaulle carved out for France a presence in the nuclear energy, computer and aerospace sectors. It was an expensive policy because France frequently had to start from scratch in developing the technology.

President Giscard d'Estaing's policy, while maintaining some of the elements of Gaullist nationalism, blunted the chauvinistic edges with the avowed recognition of the need for partnership and cooperation with Americans.

"It is a pragmatic policy,"

White House Aide Accuses A.T.&T. On Lobbying Drive

By DAVID BURNHAM

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—The acting director of the White House office of telecommunications policy accused the Bell Telephone System today of try*ing to push Congress into pass*ing what he said was a deceptively labeled communications bill based on a premise of "sheer folly."

The subject of the attack by John Eger, the acting director, was a piece of legislation called the Consumer Communications Reform Act of 1976, which has been introduced by 10 Senators and 20 members of the House of Representatives.

In the last few months, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company has mounted an intensive lobbying campaign for the bill. Officials from affiliated operating companies all over the country have been brought to Washington to urge quick Congressional action on the proposal. Operating companies in at least two states have enclosed pamphlets supporting the legislation with the monthly bills sent to telephone users.

Legislative Goal

The effect of the complex legislation sought by A.T.&T. would be to reverse the policy of the Federal Communications Commission during the last few years aimed at introducing an element of competition into certain parts of the communications business that have long been dominated by the Bell system.

Telephone company officials argue that if the F.C.C.'s policy is continued it will reduce the profits realized in the areas of competition and force major increases in the cost of telephone service to the average consumer.

The F.C.C. and past and present heads of the White House office of telecommunications policy strongly disagree with these arguments. They contend

Market Declines at Close; Dow Moves Down by 2.13

By GENE SMITH

The stock market closed with a small loss yesterday after trading all day on the upside in a narrow range.

There was no major news development during trading hours. However, after the market closed, the Federal Reserve Board reported that the basic money supply—M-1—was unchanged at a seasonally adjusted average of $303.1 billion in the week ended May 26.

Some observers felt that the downturn in the final half-hour of trading could be traced to anticipation of release of this report.

The Dow-Jones industrial average, up 2.46 at the opening, closed at 973.80, off 2.13 on the day. Volume rose to 18.9 *million shares, the largest turn*over since May 20 when 22.56 million shares were traded. Wednesday's volume was 16.12 million shares.

The Federal Reserve also reported that the broader money supply—M-2—increased to an average of $697.7 billion, up from $697.2 billion a week ago.

Commercial and industrial loans at major New York City banks rose by $439 million in the week ended Wednesday, the largest increase in almost 18 months.

S.E.C. Crackdown a Boon for Insurers

By RICHARD PHALON

One of the big beneficiaries of the Securities and Exchange Commission's recent crackdown on kickbacks, bribes and illegal campaign contributions has been the insurance industry.

Alarmed by a flurry of stockholder suits in the wake of the S.E.C. contentions—and tighter court interpretations of insiders' fiduciary responsibilities generally—more and more corporations are seeking the shelter of directors and officers liability insurance.

The motivation is as high as the potential exposure. Legal fees alone in the successful defense of a stockholder suit average close to $100,000 and in some cases have run as high of $600,000.

Damage awards are even more painful for management to contemplate. One of the most dramatic examples to date is the $30-million settlement that resulted from a stockholders suit against Mattel Inc.

The Mattel award, only partly covered by insurance, is one of many pointing to a quantum jump in a highly litigious atmosphere that began to expand in the late 1960's.

One of the crucial elements in that expansion was a suit in which some officers and directors of Texasgulf Inc. were found guilty of having illegally bought the company's stock on inside information before the discovery of a rich mining strike in Ontario was made public.

The case put new teeth in the disclosure requirements of the securities laws and gave stockholders considerably more leverage in bringing suits against officers and directors.

Many corporations contend that the Texasgulf case—compounded by the regulatory hazards of new legislation in the fields of civil rights, product liability, occupational safety and pension fund management—has made it more difficult to recruit competent outside directors.

The argument is that many able executives no longer think that a directorship, no matter how prestigious, is really worth the potentially high personal financial risks involved.

As Prof. Joseph Bishop of the Yale Law School has put it, "The Damocles sword of personal liability is as much a part of the furniture of the executive suite as the Bigelow on the floor."

The managements of many organizations —publicly held corporations and nonprofit institutions alike—agree that directors and officers liability coverage has become one of the insurance industry's hottest selling items.

For example, the Conference Board, a nonprofit business research group, recently queried 763 companies and found that 77 percent of them carried D. & O. insurance, as the coverage is known in the trade. In 1972 the comparable figure was 62

Machine Tool Industry Picking Up

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

Producers of machine tools are engaged in one of the most cyclical of cyclical businesses.

These companies suffer in recessions, and their order backlogs often are slow to recover even after business picks up. Last year, for example, there was a marked decline in orders.

Investor interest appears to be picking up now, however, along with an improvement in incoming orders. On Monday, the National Machine Tool Builders' Association reported that orders during April amounted to nearly $149 million, or 55 percent above the total for the comparable month in 1975.

Producers of machine tools have not exactly been dominating the list of new yearly highs on the New York Stock Exchange of late. But two stocks in this field did move to 1976 highs on Tuesday.

Shares of Cincinnati Milacron, the largest domestic manufacturer of machine tools used in mass production industries, traded above 33 on Tuesday—a vast improvement over its late 1974 low of 13¼. In 1967, the stock changed hands at prices as high as 67.

Also reaching a yearly high on Tuesday was the Ex-Cell-O Corporation, a leading producer of machine tools. It moved above 21, a price that is more than double its 1974 low at 9½.

The industry, which is highly competitive, also has such other companies as Brown & Sharpe, Acme-Cleveland, Giddings & Lewis and Monarch Machine Tool.

Profit prospects for this year vary from company to company, but at least one producer—Warner & Swasey—has said it expects increased sales and larger profit margins in 1976.

Warner & Swazey, the second largest producer of machine tools in this country, showed a loss for the final quarter of 1975 and wound up with earnings of $1.72 a share for all of last year.

Some machine tool producers, in an attempt to escape the essentially cyclical nature of their industry, have sought to diversify by acquiring capital goods companies with a different business cycle.

In a general sense, as the current economic recovery gathers momentum orders and backlogs—and, ultimately, the shipments that actually generate revenues—will improve for producers of machine tools.

However, serious underlying problems remain to confront the industry.

"Clouding the prospects for the machine tool industry is the declining portion of spending for machine tools as overall capital expenditures for durable goods industries continue in a long-term uptrend," notes Standard & Poor's Corporation. "In fact, machine tool purchases have not kept pace with inflation since the mid-1950's. In 1956, for example, some 27 percent of machinery and equipment investment went for machine tools; by 1973, machine tool expenditures dropped to 13 percent."

Some improvement took place in the next two years, the investment advisory service noted, "but whether this signals a turnaround remains to be seen."

Meanwhile, a lot of money that would have been spent years ago for machine tools has gone instead more recently into pollution-control and safety equipment required by various statutes.

Standard & Poor's comments that "current high market prices for the machine tool group indicate that investors are already looking ahead to the improved prospects for 1977."

As for current investment suggestions, however, the advisory service takes the view that market potentials appear to be more promising in other machinery groups.

Included among its seven favored machinery issues are Briggs & Stratton, Caterpillar Tractor, Cooper Industries, Deere & Company, Joy Manufacturing, Massey-Ferguson and Rexnord Inc.

These companies manufacture such varied products as earth-moving equipment, industrial engines, farm machinery and mining equipment.

while Datsun, another Japanese car that has moved into second place in import sales, said deliveries were up 26 percent. However, Volkswagen, which had dropped to third position, said its sales were off 48 percent.

Stuart Perkins, president of Volkswagen of America, said he was not sure why VW sales were off. The cmopany previously had a shortage of Rabbit models but Mr. Perkins said, "Our inventory now is in pretty good shape. People just seem to vacillate in their preferences. They aren't concerned with fuel shortages any more."

The American customers' preference for larger cars was evident at G.M. where both its Oldsmobile and Cadillac divisions reported record sales for May.

Ward's said subcompact sized cars accounted for 12.27 percent of domestic sales in May, compact 25.63 percent, vans 1.48 percent, intermediates 33.05 percent and full-sized cars 27.57 percent.

This weeek, the domestic auto industry is scheduled to build 164,624 cars, down 12.6 percent from last week because of the Memorial Day holiday, according to Automotive News.

While output will be off from last week's 188,398 cars, it will still be up 10 percent from the 148,644 cars built in the comparable week a year ago.

So far this year, the industry has built 3,924,086 cars, up 48 percent from this point in 1975.

THINK FRESH AIR FUND

Car Is Reported 'Nearly Poll

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—California air-quality officials said today that they had tested a "nearly pollution-free" Volvo automobile that dispreves the need for any relaxation of standards in the 1970 Clean Air Act.

The Ford Administration, the Environmental Protection Agency and the auto industry have been urging Congress to postpone for at least five years the steep, mandatory reduction of toxic chemical exhausts from new cars.

Opening a new campaign to defend the strict limits of the law, Thomas Quinn, chairman of the California Air Resources Board, said at a news conference here that the main technical arguments in support of postponement have now been rebutted in a car that Volvo's Swedish manufacturers are prepared to retail in California late this year.

The Volvo improvements, he added, would add only $25 to $50 to the price of new cars, and they do not prevent the new model from getting 10 percent better mileage than this year's Volvos.

Industry and Federal Government officials agreed that Volvo's apparent breakthrough was "significant." But they said it would take years, at best, to adapt the Volvo technology to American production, and they insisted it did not change their position on the debate pending in Congress.

Using a New Jersey-built catalyst that removes three certified pollutants from auto exhaust at once, the Volvo prototype runs substantially cleaner than the smogless car that Congress wanted manufacturers to be building by 1978, Mr. Quinn explained. It represents a much larger improvements over the Federal standards for 1976 models.

According to California tests that the Environmental Protection Agency has also certified, the new Volvo emits only 0.2 grams of hydrocarbons a mile, compared to the 0.41 grams that the 1970 law set as its ultimate target. It emits 2.8 grams a mile of carbon monoxide, compared with 3.4 grams mandated for 1978. And it emits 0.17 grams of nitrogen oxides, compared with the 0.4 gram figure in the Federal statute.

"The technology to meet the standard we are proposing actually exists right now," Mr. Quinn said, "but past foot-dragging by Detroit may make it impossible for some domestic auto makers to adapt immediately the new system to their cars."

Accordingly, Mr. Quinn and Representative Henry Waxman, a Los Angeles Democrat, urged Congress to make 1981 the deadline for full compliance with Federal standards.

It is the first time that the nation's refineries have turned out more than seven million barrels a day of gasoline since Dec. 5, 1975. Some analysts have indicated that a production level of about seven million barrels a day will be necessary over the summer months to insure plentiful supplies for the peak vacation driving period.

whether a particular still or motion picture system is fun to use.

The systems that produce playing-card-like color prints outside the camera, sold since 1972 by Polaroid and now for the first time by Kodak, are part of an intensifying technological explosion in amateur photography, which already generates more than $4 billion in yearly sales in the United States alone.

Since 1963, technological advances aimed at speed and simplicity have included instant, peel-apart color film, snap-in roll-film cartridges, pocket cameras producing big prints from miniaturized negatives, color home movies without extra light, multiple-flash units and electronic exposure controls.

Electronic controls are installed not only in Polaroid's SX-70 and Kodak's EK4 and EK6 instant-picture cameras, but also in a wide range of single-lens reflex and home movie cameras.

In the development of electronic controls, the photographic industry's technological race for convenience and mass markets has been spurred by the same advances in electronic miniaturization that gave birth to the pocket calculator, the electronic watch, solid-state color television and the ubiquitous small tape recorders and transistor radios.

Like the mass electronic industries, the rapidly expanding amateur photographic industry markets high-technology products for a leisured age. And it is leisured. Average hours of work have declined more than 25 percent, while noninflated output per man-hour has doubled in the last 25 years. For an average American family, the discretionary part of income has been pushing toward 40 percent.

In such a situation, photographic companies have seen their business expand rapidly. In the last decade, Kodak's worldwide sales have gone up 2.5 times, from less than $2 billion a year to nearly $5 billion, and Polaroid's have quadrupled, from $200 million to $800 million annually.

More than 60 percent of Polaroid's business is in the amateur field.

The expansion has been prodigious enough to erode old forms of cooperation between such companies as Polaroid and Kodak, while creating new pressures toward licensing of patents and sharing of information to allow other companies to make, for example, cameras to use Kodak film.

Kodak has indicated it will share, as with its Instamatic and Pocket Instamatic cameras, information about making cameras to use its instant film.

A patent infringement dispute between Polaroid and Berkey Photo Inc. was settled by a licensing arrangement, and another dispute, involving the SX-70 may be settled the same way.

In the last week, Polaroid announced that it was considering whether to license a Japanese company to make one of its cameras.

Until Polaroid centralized manufacture of its SX-70 cameras at a factory in Norwood, Mass., it frequently contracted with such companies as U.S. Time and Bell & Howell to manufacture its cameras, but marketed them itself.

A similiar pattern dominated Polaroid's cooperation with Kodak. For more than 10 years Kodak supplied negatives for the first generation of Polaroid Polacolor film, introduced in 1963. The Kodak-made negative, which involved a one-time information exchange, was then put into film packs, along with a Polaroid-made positive, at a Polaroid factory in Massachusetts.

For a time, it appeared that the cooperation might expand. In 1969, Polaroid agreed to license Kodak to produce and market Polacolor film in 1975 or 1976. The cooperation appeared so close that in 1971 the Justice Department conducted a low-key antitrust investigation.

But the situation changed in 1972, when Polaroid introduced its folding single-lens reflex SX-70 camera, in which it had invested, entirely out of current revenues, perhaps $500 million in development and start-up costs.

Immediately after limited commercial introduction of the SX-70 in Miami, Kodak announced that it was canceling plans to market Polacolor. In 1974, Kodak stopped supplying Polacolor negatives.

Polaroid was ready to take the job over. From the start SX-70 negative had been made in a new $100-million factory in New Bedford, Mass.

Using the same metallized dyes as those in SX-70 film, Polaroid introduced the peel-apart film called Polacolor 2, designed for use in a wide range of cameras and with a negative also made at New Bedford.

The new Polacolor peel-apart film, widely used in professional and technical photography, remains important for Polaroid. This is true even though Polaroid has announced that it intends to concentrate on expanding the market for its SX-70 cameras. More than three million SX-70's have been manufactured in the last four years.

To call attention to Polacolor 2, Dr. Edwin H. Land, Polaroid's founder, chairman and director of research, demonstrated full-size Polacolor 2 copies of old master paintings at the company's annual shareholders' meeting April 27.

At the same meeting, Polaroid's president, William J. McCune, discussed plans to market an 8-by-10-inch version of Polacolor 2.

The meeting focused on Polaroid's two major steps, introduction of a new camera and film, to armor itself for the marketing, in Canada early last month and in the United States late this month of Kodak's EK4 and EK6 instant picture cameras and the PR-10 color film for use in both.

The new camera was the Pronto a nonfolding, motorized black plastic camera designed to handle SX-70 film. The new film was a version of the SX-70 film designed to operate over a much wider range of temperatures without adjusting a lighten-darken control.

Polaroid's senior vice president for marketing, Peter Wensberg, said 400,000 of the Pronto cameras had been ordered. They went on sale in March. Mr. McCune said the New Bedford negative factory had converted its SX-70 manufacture completely to the new film.

Such plans are considered vital to meet an expected marketing blitz from Kodak, including heavy television advertising during the Olympic games and the Republican convention, and visits to 140 cities in the United States this fall by 11 Kodak sales training teams whose goal is to teach 20,000 sales people how to demonstrate the new Kodak instant picture system to customers.

The sharpened competition between Kodak and Polaroid was highlighted by the flurry of patent actions surrounding Kodak's introduction of the instant picture system.

In a suit filed in Boston on April 26, Polaroid accused Kodak of infringing 10 of its patents. Two weeks earlier, Kodak had sought in the Federal Court of Canada to invalidate nine Polaroid patents in Canada, including several inventions involved in the Boston suit. Kodak also has taken similar actions in other countries.

In effect, Polaroid has accused Kodak of copying important elements of the SX-70 system, which Dr. Land has characterized as a complete "restatement" of instant picture technology. In a reply action filed in Boston on May 18, Kodak accused Polaroid of trying to prolong its expiring patents with "trivial variants" of earlier inventions.

Although both companies would be expected to resist wide disclosure of their invention processes in a public trial, some patent attorneys speculate that neither company will find it easy to back down.

State Bank Chiefs Plan Rate-Experiment Talks

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—The banking commissioner of New York, New Jersey and the six New England states are preparing to meet Monday in Boston to consider a proposal that the region be used to experiment with two interest rates of major significance to consumers.

The rates are those that customers receive on deposits at banks and savings institutions and those that homes buyers pay on their mortgages.

The meeting, which will be held at Logan Airport, is being organized by Carol S. Greenwald, the activist commissioner of banks in Massachusetts and head of a group of state bank supervisors. Her department is seeking to insure what deputy commissioner Steven J. Weiss described today as "the long-term viability" of savings banks and savings and loan associations, which several times in recent years have been caught in severe credit squeezes.

Principal Home Financers

These so-called thrift institutions are the principal suppliers of financing for homes and apartment houses.

The chief elements of the proposal are the gradual abolition of the Federal Reserve's Regulation Q, which places limits on interest paid on savings accounts, and the authorization of mortgages whose interest rates would fluctuate according to credit market conditions.

"The hope is to come up with a fairly concrete proposal that can be taken to Congress and the Federal regulatory agencies," Mr. Weiss said.

The eight states involved already have given their savings institutions the most liberal checking account and lending privileges found in the United States.

New York State's authorization of savings bank checking accounts came just last month. Savings institutions in New England have for several years been permitted to offer checking accounts that pay up to 5 percent interest.

"We feel there's no need to wait for a comprehensive national program to complete the package in this area," said Mr. Weiss, noting that Federal legislation broadening the powers of savings institutions, among other things, has stalled in Congress.

Mrs. Greenwald's proposal might take the form of lifting the Regulation Q ceiling by one-half point every six months until it became meaningless. Savings institutions could then bid whatever rate was needed to attract money to meet the demand from mortgage borrowers.

Variable-rate mortgages, now being offered by state-chartered savings and loan associations in California and by at least one federally insured Boston savings bank, would be authorized for all institutions in the eight-state region.

This presumably would encourage banks to make long-term loans since interest rates could be adjusted upward if necessary.

Food Fair Confirms Talks on Acquiring The Penn Fruit Co.

By HERBERT KOSHETZ

Food Fair Stores of Philadelphia confirmed reports yesterday that it had been holding discussions with the Penn Fruit Company, which has been in Chapter XI bankruptcy proceedings since last September, regarding a possible acquisition of Penn Fruit by Food Fair.

Merger News

Penn Fruit in 1974 operated 58 supermarkets, three specialty food stores, 18 home and garden stores, two junior department stores and eight self-service laundry and dry-cleaning stores in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Delaware and Maryland.

When Penn Fruit, which had cash-flow problems, filed for bankruptcy, it listed assets of $44.59 million and liabilities of $28.8 million.

Since then, it has sold or closed many of its units, is now operating 20 supermarkets, 10 home and garden stores and a single gift shop.

For the year ended Sept. 2, 1975, Penn Fruit reported a deficit of $32.2 million on sales of $276.7 million.

Trade sources said that a creditors' committee for Penn Fruit had rejected the Food Fair offer on the ground that creditors would be better served by liquidation or sale of store units than by a takeover.

Di Giorgio Corp. Sells Feather River Sawmills

The Di Giorgio Corporation of San Francisco said yesterday that it had sold its Feather River Lumber Company sawmills in California to Sierra Pacific Industries of Arcata, Calif., for at least $13 million.

A larger purchase price may be realized, Di Giorgio said, depending on the market price of lumber products over the next three years.

Di Grigorio manufactures and distributes consumer goods and forest products. Sierra Pacific is a closely held forest-products company.

Staff members in the Senate and House believe it is unlikely that the extensive lobbying effort of A.T.&T. will result in the passage this year of the legislation.

But the staff members, who asked not to be quoted by name, said the lobbying might result in passage next year and might also serve to deter decisions by the F.C.C. that would be opposed by the telephone company.

Mr. Eger's critical statements about the Bell system are consistent with the testimony of his predecessor, Clay T. Whitehead, before the antitrust subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee two years ago. "It is unbecoming for a company the size and stature of A.T.&T. to use its legal, political and economic power to extend its monopoly by government fiat to areas where monopoly is not called for," Mr. Whitehead said.

Although the White House has not adopted a formal position on the telephone legislation, the criticism also seems to be consistent with the Ford Administration's stated belief that less government regulation and more competition is better for both business and the public.

Several months ago, for example, Jonathan C. Rose, Deputy Assistant Attorney General for antitrust matters, supported the F.C.C.'s decisions increasing communications competition.

"New entry and competition have brought substantial benefits to the public: better service, more responsive service as well as fairer, more cost justified rates than those arrived at through detailed and pervasive step-by-step regulation," he said.

Commodity Price Index Up 1.5 From Week-Ago Level

The commodity spot market price index of foodstuffs and industrial materials rose to 204.1 from 202.6 last week.

The index compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics stood at 186.1 on June 3, 1975.

The following table gives the index and its components using 1967=100 as a base:

looks at women from a new perspective.

Women are no strangers to Esmark. Our food company, Swift, has been a supplier to American housewives for 120 years. But Esmark now relates to women in another way: through its newest family member, Playtex, the U.S. brand leader in bras, girdles, household rubber gloves, and disposable baby nursers. In tampons, Playtex has zoomed from zero to second place in less than nine years. Playtex, in good company with Esmark's interests in food, fuel, fertilizers, and financial services. Business Briefs

Bank in Houston Ordered Closed

AUSTIN, Tex., June 3 (UPI)—The Northeast Bank of Houston was ordered closed today because of heavy withdrawals of deposits and problems with the bank's assets. The bank is the second in Houston ordered closed this year. The State Banking Commissioner, Robert E. Stewart, said efforts to solve the bank's asset problems, which involved other real estate acquired through foreclosure on loans, had been unsuccessful and the sudden withdrawal of deposits made insolvency of the bank imminent.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was named receiver for the bank, and Mr. Stewart said the F.D.I.C. would begin paying off insured deposits as soon as possible.

House Opposes Cotton Promotion

WASHINGTON, June 3 (UPI)—The House voted today to get the Government out of subsidizing the promotion of cotton. By a 370-to-6 vote, the House approved amendments to the 1966 Cotton Research and Promotion Act. The bill, which goes to the Senate, would end the contribution of taxpayers' money for the efforts of Cotton Inc., a promotion and research group whose goal is to get Americans to use more cotton fabrics.

The promotion act established an assessment of $1 a bale of cotton produced, to pay for the promotion efforts. That amount was supplemented in the past with Federal help, up to $10 million in some years, but about $3 million in recent years.

West German Unemployment Falls

NUREMBERG, West Germany, June 3 (UPI)—Unemployment in West Germany dropped below one million in May for the first time in 16 months, the Federal Labor Office announced today. The office said the number of persons out of work fell in May by 140,200 to 953,500. This corresponds to a drop in the rate of unemployment from 4.8 percent in April to 4.2 percent. "The improvement is spread out more or less over the whole of the economy," Josef Stingl, head of the Labor Office, said.

As another indication of the turnaround in the labor market, Mr. Stingl said the number of persons employed only on a temporary basis was lower in mid-May than in mid-April.

Mr. Stingl said temporary employment fell by 105,300 to 250,000, a drop of 29.6 percent from mid-April. He said there were 22,400 more job vacancies at the end of May than at the end of April. This represented an increase of 8.9 percent over April. "This shows the readiness of businesses to hire more people," Mr. Stingl said.

Europe Plans Higher Steel Output

BRUSSELS, June 3 (Reuters)—The Common Market Commission is proposing a sharp increase in raw steel output in the third quarter of 1976, to 35 million tons from the 27.4 million produced in the 1975 period. However, the 1975 quarter occurred during a year of recession in Europe, and the new target figure was still below the 38 million tons produced in the 1974 period.

Mercantile Market, Under Fire, Offers New Potato Futures Plan

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

The beleaguered New York Mercantile Exchange has drawn up and submitted to the Commodities Futures Trading Commission a new and broadened proposed potato futures contract that the regulatory agency had demanded.

The commission's insistence on a new contract followed the exchange's dilemma resulting from defaults by sellers, including several major potato growers, on 997 May 1976 potato futures contracts.

While no one now knows the ultimate terms of the new contract, which is in rough-draft form, it is certain that delivery rules, limited to Maine-grown potatoes, will provide for delivery of additional Eastern varieties. However, Idaho-type potatoes will not be deliverable.

One of the major defaulters, Jack Richard Simplot, is dominant in growing the Idaho types. Maine potatoes are round in contrast to the Idaho's elongated shape. Another major defaulter is Pete J. Taggares, a large potato grower and general farm operator in the state of Wahington.

Delivery points will be increased. Delivery now can be made in Maine or in 13 large cities, including Boston, New York, Newark, Hartford and Buffalo. The allowable freight rate is from point of origin in Maine to the Harlem River freight yards in New York City and is based on railroad freight rates.

At present the contract provides for delivery by railroad only, and this will be changed to permit truck delivery possibly by ship.

The present requirement for delivery in freight carloads of potatoes packed in 50-pound paper bags will be liberalized to permit other types and sizes of packaging.

For years the most active trading month for potatoes has been the May delivery, partly because May represents the end of the season and therefore a period of shortage or surplus of Maine potatoes, harvested the previous fall.

Other contract months—November, a harvest month, March and April—are traded lightly by comparison. A January contract, also permitted, has not been traded for years because of a lack of interest.

All contracts tend to be low-priced in the summer during the new growing season, partly because speculators lack interest until the crop shapes up and partly because of the impact of hedge selling by farmers and others.

Then, following the harvest in the fall, traders begin to size up the crop outlook.

The new contract will provide additional trading months between November and the following spring. Since the commission has raised a question about enough potatoes being available in May, the May delivery may be eliminated.

ExxonU.S.A. Raises Prices Of Gasoline by 1.3c a Gallon

Exxon U.S.A., chief American affiliate of the Exxon Corporation, announced yesterday that it had raised wholesale prices of all grades of gasoline by 1.3 cents a gallon. Price increases of one or two cents a gallon have been made by other major companies over the last month. The current nationwide retail average price is 59 cents a gallon. The Union Carbide Corporation announced that schedule prices of its two grades of Ucar bisphenol A, an intermediate used in the manufacture of epoxy and polyester resins and polycarbonates, are being increased 4.6 percent to 9.1 percent, effective July 1 for spot and contract customers.

ment, the J. I. Case Company, a unit of Tenneco, said it would participate in a new venture in Mexico for the manufacture of crawler tractors and related heavy equipment for the construction industry.

Manufacturing will be handled in Mexico City by a new company, J. I. Case de Mexico S.A., which will be capitalized initially at $11.9 million. In the new company, J. I. Case will have 40 percent of the equity and 30 percent will be held by Bufete Industrial, a privately held construction and engineering concern based in Mexico City. The other 30 percent will be held by a specialized Mexican Government agency, the Fund for Industrial Development.

Lockheed Saudi Deal

The Lockheed Aircraft Corporation announced that its Lockheed International A.G. unit has received a $625 million contract over 40 months from Saudi Arabia to develop its air traffic control system. Work on the new system is scheduled to begin this month.

Burlington Closes Swiss Yarn Plant

Burlington Industries Inc. has announced the closing of its spun yarn plant in Arlesheim, Switzerland, in a move to reduce losses in its international operations.

Horace C. Jones, chairman, said that the spun yarn business in Switzerland, France and West Germany "has been largely responsible for a consolidated loss of $8 million in international operations in 1975." He added that "our other operations in Europe have been highly successful."

Mr. Jones said that the company anticipated no further adverse effect on results from the closing. He added that "we believe our remaining yarn operations in Europe will be profitable in 1977."

Royal Dutch Expects Sumatra Coal Output

G. A. Wagner, president of the Royal Dutch Petroleum Company, disclosed that the company expected to start producing coal in the next two or three years from mines at Bukit Asam, in southern Sumatra. He added that Royal Dutch has a production-sharing contract with the Indonesian Government.

Mr. Wagner said the price of the coal produced could compete with the cost of oil if coal production reached a total of 5 million to 10 million tons a year.

Airline Buys DC-10's

British Caledonian Airways announced it had purchased two McDonnell Douglas DC-10-30 jet planes and spare parts for approximately $70 million. The planes will be powered by General Electric Company engines of 51,000 pounds thrust each. The acquisition from the McDonnell Douglas Corporation involves an option by the airline to acquire two more of the wide-bodied aircraft later.

Heinz Georgia Plant

The Heinz U.S.A. division of the H. J. Heinz Company said it had signed a lease agreement with Gold Kist, an Atlanta-based farmers cooperative, for a food-processing plant in Lithonia, Ga. The facility will be operated by Heinz U.S.A. as a frozen-pizza processing plant. Production is expected to begin before the end of 1976.

Bathurst Expansion

Consolidated-Bathurst of Montreal disclosed that it would spend $25 million to increase newsprint production to 1,070 tons a day from 825 tons by December 1977 at its Port Alfred, Quebec, pulp and paper mill. The expansion program involves installation of new units. The latest expenditure is the third stage of a program begun in the early 1970's and involving outlays of some $50 million.

G.E. in Soviet Deal

The General Electric Company said it would furnish gas turbine components valued at about $90 million for 158 gas turbine compressor modules ordered recently by Machino-Import of the Soviet Union. The compressors will be installed in 22 natural gas transmission stations along a giant pipeline running from Orenburg in north central Russia to the Czechoslovakian border at Uzhgorud, a distance of more than 1,600 miles.

COURT IN RULING ON EARTH STEAM

Says Mineral Rights Cover Ownership of Energy

SANTA ROSA, Calif., June 3 (AP)—In a decision with potentially wide energy implications, a judge has ruled that ownership of geothermal steam is covered by mineral rights, not water rights.

The ruling by Superior Court Judge Kenneth Eymann means that the potentially valuable subsurface steam, used to power electric generators, is the property of the holder of mineral rights to a piece of land and not necessarily the owner of the land itself.

The ruling, made public yesterday, upheld the claim of Geothermal Kinetics against the Union Oil Company of California, two other companies and George and Hazel Curry, owners of a 408-acre site in Sonoma County.

"It appears to this court that what this case is all about is 'energy' and who owns it," Judge Eymann said.

The judge reviewed extensive scientific testimony about the origins and nature of the underground steam in the 200-square-mile area known as The Geysers. At issue, he said, was whether this steam had more in common with minerals under the ground or water on top.

Judge Eymann cited the high mineral content of the condensed steam, its origin in the molten minerals deep below the surface and the fact that it is mined much like gas and oil.

Thus the steam, which Geothermal Kinetics had been capturing and selling to the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, belongs to Geothermal under a mineral rights agreement negotiated by former owners of the property in 1951, Judge Eymann ruled.

The judge rejected the contention of Union Oil, the Magma Power Company, the Magma Thermal Company and the Currys that the holders of surface rights should be owners of the steam.

U.S. View of Decision

An official of the United States Energy Research and Development Administration's geothermal program said yesterday that the decision was likely to be regarded as "good news" by the industries developing geothermal energy supplies in California and elsewhere.

Mineral rights holders are more likely than surface owners to seek to exploit underground resources, said Randall Stephens, chief of the policy research branch of ERDA's geothermal energy division.

The decision, he said, involved a dispute between private parties, owning either mineral rights or surface land. "It cuts the number of people you have to deal with in half."

Mr. Stephens noted that there was a "patchwork" situation, however, because the Ninth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals ruled the opposite way in a similar case, also involving Union Oil in the same area, on land that had been obtained in 1916 through the Federal Homestead Act.

A third case, also involving geothermal rights in the area, involves state-held land. This case has not been decided, Mr. Stephens said.

conference, and much of it will be hostile. Indeed, the prevailing theme reflected in background papers for the conference is that multinationals bleed the poorest countries and aggravate their economic woes.

No such simplistic view emerged from the informal colloquy among spokesmen for unions representing factory workers in Pakistan, the Philippines, France, Japan and the United States. On the contrary, at least as much was said in praise of multinationals as was said in condemnation. The consensus was that, for the most part, corporations operating across national lines tended to be responsible in their approach to wages and other aspects of industrial relations.

Not that there was complacency about the concentradet power represented by the multinationals or about the virual certainty, as the unionists saw it, that they would keep growing in size and strength.

A need was seen for establishing some form of regulation over abuses of power by these corporate giants, but again an interesting element of unanimity pervaded the comments: governmental control should not be exercised by national laws that would put one country's multinationals at a competitive disadvantage with their economic rivals from other nations or that would freeze them out of certain areas altogether. Rather, the desirable thing was to make all multinationals conform to uniform international codes of conduct of the kind now under consideration by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

Pat Greathouse, vice president of the United Automobile Workers, told of inviting union observers from all the countries in which the Big Three of the American farm equipment industry—Deere & Company, International Harvester and Caterpillar—had affiliates to sit in on the opening of contract negotiations in the United States three years ago.

A footnote came from Herman Rebhan, secretary general of the Geneva-based International Metalworkers Federation. He went to Madrid last February in response to a call for help from strikers at Deere's Spanish plant. They had been out for four weeks over the discharge of leaders of their underground union, and company officials showed no interest in negotiating a settlement.

Mr. Rebhan telephoned Mr. Greathouse in Detroit; he in turn telephoned the company headquarters in Moline, Ill. The next day Mr. Rebhan got a call in Madrid from the chief of Deere's European operations and the strike was over within 24 hours. "Everyone who is not in jail can go back to work" was the settlement formula.

Tovoji Shirochi, head of the Japanese Electrical Workers Union, spoke of the dilemma of Japanese workers as they contemplated the worldwide expansion of their own multinationals and the increasing confrontation within Japan of their native industries by General Electric and other American multinationals. One stabilization tool the Japanese have devised at trade union instigation has been creation of a liaison committee to investigate complaints from other countries, especially those in Southeast Asia, about unfair competition by Japanese companies. The committee also looks into complaints inside Japan.

Khurshid Ahmad, general secretary of the All-Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions, said his country wanted investment by multinationals. But he stressed that it had to be "on a basis adapted to our culture—one that will foster agricultural development so we can be self-sufficient."

A similar view came from Democrito T. Mendoza, secretary general of the Philippines Trades Union Congress. He emphasized the urgency of union cooperation in home and host countries, so that workers would be protected both where the companies come from and where they go.

Antoine Laval, confederal secretary of the Force Ouvrière of France, admonished labor to look at both the negative and positive aspects of multinationals, especially now that they had ceased to be an American monopoly. His principal hope for checking the urge of large corporations to maximize profits and minimize social obligations lay in development of international standards under pressure from free unions in the industrialized countries.

"We in the unions have a much greater problem than the corporations have," said Mr. Greathouse of the United Auto Workers. "They can send out an interoffice memo saying, 'jump this way—or jump out.' We must get consensus based on our national traditions and the needs of our people."

The New York Times/Victor Lusinchi

Prices of Soybeans Drop Because of Less Demand

Slower foreign and domestic demand for soybean meal influenced a sharp drop in soybean meal and soybean prices in futures trading yesterday, on the Chicago Board of Trade

After some sharp increases for both commodities recently, some of the selling yesterday represented profit taking by speculators.

Soybean meal, a basic for animal feeds, closed at $175.50 a ton, off $3 a ton in terms of the July contract, which a month ago was priced around $140 a ton. July soybeans dropped 8½ cents a bushel to $5.78½. A month ago they sold around $4.97 a bushel.

Another reason for weakness in soybeans is that stocks of soybean oil have been building up, which was reflected yesterday in a Government report While most traders knew about the buildup, it might have been sharper than they expected.

In the wake of the International Monetary Fund gold sale at about $129 an ounce, gold futures on the Commodity Exchange drifted lower. The July delivery closed at $128.70 an ounce, down from $130.60.

Silver futures gained about 2 cents an ounce in very active trading on the same exchange, with the July contract closing at $4.72 an ounce. The announcement that Panama plans to take payment for sugar sold to Great Western United in silver was given by traders as a reason for the strength.

William T. Bagley, chairman of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, in Washington yesterday was highly critical of the New York Mercantile Exchange for taking no action against those involved in last week's massive potato futures default.

"I am not pleased with the lack of action on the part of the New York Mercantile Exchange in finding the reasons for this huge default in the May contract, if warranted," he said.

Reflecting ample current supplies, sugar futures drifted lower on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, with the July delivery closing at 12.88-12.92 cents a pound, down from 13.40 cents.

(accrued interest to be added)

The 1976 Bonds are being issued to finance a portion of the cost of acquisition and construction of the Washington Public Power Supply System Nuclear Project No. 2. The Project's entire capability has been sold by the Supply System to certain statutory preference customers of the Bonneville Power Administration and assigned by such preference customers to Bonneville under Net Billing Agreements described in the Official Statement. The 1976 Bonds and the interest thereon are payable solely from the Bond Fund created by the Resolution and the moneys pledged to such fund are limited to the income, revenues, receipts and profits derived by the Supply System through the ownership and operation by it of the Project, including all payments to be made to the Supply System pursuant to the Net Billing Agreements, and Bond proceeds. The Net Billing Agreements provide that each such preference customer is obligated to pay the Supply System its share of Project annual costs, and Bonneville is obligated to credit the amounts so paid against amounts owed to Bonneville by such preference customers for the power and services it provides, whether or not the Project is completed, operable, or operating and notwithstanding the suspension, interruption, interference, reduction or curtailment of the Project output. The Bonneville Power Adminstration will use its revenues to pay any costs billed to such preference customers which are not offset under the Net Billing Agreements.

These Bonds are offered when, as and if issued and received by us, subject to prior sale and approval of legality by Messrs. Wood Dawson Love & Sabatine, New York, New York, Bond Counsel to the Supply System and by Messrs. Houghton, Cluck, Coughlin & Riley, Seattle, Washington, Special Counsel to the Supply System.

deral Reserve
reported that at major New
nks increased more sharply than they had in a year and a half.

Neither the reserve-draining operation nor the loan figures seemed to impress the credit markets so much as the stable money-supply figure. After the Federal Reserve data were published on Wall Street news wires, bond prices rose slightly at the end of the afternoon.

The increased business loans at New York City banks plus a rise in rates on commercial paper made it appear likely that Citibank would raise its basic rate on commercial loans this morning. "If Citibank doesn't, somebody else will," one Government securities dealer remarked after hearing the figures.

Nevertheless, the dominant mood in the bond market appeared to remain optimistic that this week's recovery would remain intact.

"The correction we had for six weeks was severe," another Treasury securities trader said. "This week, the market has tended to regain its balance. It has discounted the bad news that's going to happen."

In the Treasury's $2 billion note sale, $5.06 billion of tenders were submitted. Yields on the bids accepted ranged from a high of 7.73 percent to a low of 7.6 percent, and the Treasure put a 7⅝ percent interest rate on the issue.

It awarded 2 percent of the bids made at the highest rate, sold $388 million on a non-competitive basis at the average rate and also sold $160 million to foreign accounts and international monetary authorities.

Pennsylvania Issue Sold

In the tax-exempt bond market, Pennsylvania sold $137 million of bonds, rated A-1 by Moody's and AA by Standard & Poor's to a Chase Manhattan Bank syndicate. The bonds were then offered to investors at yields ranging from 3.40 percent on those due later this year up to 7.10 percent (for 5¼'s in 1995. The unsold balance was reported as $36 million.

The Washington Public Power System awarded $120 million of triple-A revenue bonds to a Salomon Brothers group. Term bonds maturing in 2006 were priced to yield 6.68 percent; those due in 2012 were priced to yield 6.75 percent; and serial bonds ranged from 4.70 percent in 1982 up to 6.25 percent in 1998.

Virginia, which has sold bonds since December 1973, awarded $19,555,000 of its triple-A securities to another Chase Manhattan Bank syndicate, which priced them to yield 3.25 percent in 1977 up to 5.70 percent in 1996.

Legal Defense Costs In Directors and Officers Liability Suits

A survey last year of 1,720 companies showed that 65 percent had purchased directors and officers liability insurance.

Most of this coverage comes in two parts — one indemnifying the company for any payments it has to make to officers and directors as compensation for legal expenses and judgments, and the other indemnifying directors and officers directly in situations in which the company is not permitted to help them.

Of a total of 225 claims reported in the survey, legal costs were reported in connection with 143 of those claims.

Other studies by the Wyatt Company, an actuarial and employee benefit consulting firm, point in the same direction.

Wyatt last year surveyed 1,720 companies and found that 65 percent had bought D. & O. coverage. That compared with 58 percent of the 1,321 companies Wyatt queried the year before.

Almost all such coverage comes in two parts—one indemnifying the company for any payments it has to make to officers and directors as compensation for legal expenses and judgments, and the other indemnifying directors and officers directly in situations in which the company is not permitted to help them.

Those situations vary with state law. In general the only kind of reimbursement officers and directors can expect in lawsuits brought on behalf of a corporation is the payment of legal expenses. The latitude is greater in cases brought personally on behalf of a group of stockholders.

Because stockholders have become more restive, particularly over disclosure problems caused by the wave of mergers and acquisitions that has swept American industry in the last five years or so, D. & O. coverage is one of the most expensive forms of insurance.

Depending on the risk variables involved and how the actuaries weigh them, a corporation with more than $2 billion in assets might pay anywhere from $19,000 to $75,000 a year for $10 million of D. & O. coverage. The average premium, according to the Wyatt Company is around $43,000.

For the same amount of protection, a smaller company—$100 million to $250 million in assets—might pay between $4,200 and $70,000 a year. The average is about $14,000.

Rates have been rising lately, apparently because underwriters' losses have been increasing. A lot of the profit has gone out of the business, coverage has become harder to get and the industry, says Warren Brockmeyer of the Wyatt Company, is bracing itself for a new round of losses growing out of the bribery and kickback actions brought by the S.E.C.

Since most D. & O. policies do not cover "illegal acts," the insiders at some corporations cited in the S.E.C. cases may be in for a very rough time.

The big risks are corporate, mainly because the securities laws give stockholders so much room for maneuver. Officers of such nonprofit institutions as hospitals have their worries, too, but the Wyatt sample suggests that the incidence of suits against them is far lower than in profit-making executive suites, where the securities laws loom as a major fact of business life.

encouragement to economists who have been awaiting a significant increase in commercial credit as confirmation of the national economic recovery.

Thus far in the recovery, corporate borrowers have been able to finance their cash needs internally and in general have reduced their borrowing. The recent increase in the demand for corporate credit, if sustained, would signify a strengthening of the recovery.

The climb in the latest statement week was only the sixth in the last 22 weeks and was the largest since the week ended Dec. 31, 1974, when commercial and industrial loans moved up $483 million.

The nation's narrowly defined money supply—known as M-1 and consisting of currency in circulation plus checking account balances — was unchanged at $303.1 billion in the week ended May 26, according to the central bank.

The more broadly defined money supply—called M-2 and consisting of M-1 plus time deposits at commercial banks other than large certificates of deposit—moved up $500 million to $697.7 billion in the May 26 statement week, the Fed reported. The M-2 figure for the previous week was revised downward by $200 million to $697.2 billion.

In the latest 13 weeks, or statistical quarter, M-1 has grown at an annual rate of 9.2 percent, the Fed reported. Its target range for M-1 growth is 4.5 to 7 percent for the 12 months between the final quarter of last year and the final quarter this year.

M-2 growth in the latest 13 weeks amounted to 11.2 percent, or somewhat above the Federal Reserve target range of 7.5 to 10 percent. The Fed has disclosed that it would attempt to restrain monetary growth in an effort to assure that the economic recovery does not produce an early resurgence of inflation.

A byproduct of the Fed's decision to bring money supply growth back within its target areas has been the recent increase in short-term interest rates. Confirming the trends evident in the money markets, the Fed reported yesterday that rates in nearly all categories that it monitors rose in the June 2 statement week.

An independent survey compared Simplicity McCall's, Butterick and Vogue.

PATTERN PURCHASES BY BRAND (July—December, 1975)
SIMPLICITY	56%
McCALL'S	25
BUTTERICK	12
VOGUE	5
ALL OTHERS	2

A statistical compilation of the answers of those interviewed in the survey showed that, of all patterns purchased by brand, more Simplicity patterns were purchased in the preceding six months than all other brands combined.

Respondents in this survey were also asked to rate which of the four major pattern brands was "best" on a variety of pattern characteristics such as the ease of following pattern instructions, the selection of fashions which are easy to sew, etc. Among those who specified a brand choice, Simplicity was rated "best" on all positive attributes covered in the survey.

And, in an evaluation of monthly counter catalogs, the survey showed Simplicity's Catalog to be the first looked at by most of those interviewed when the catalogs of all major pattern companies were available at the counter.

RATING OF CATALOGS, AS FIRST CHOICE
SIMPLICITY	78%
McCALL'S	17
BUTTERICK	6
VOGUE	6
OTHER BRANDS	1

This independent research survey was conducted among 1,566 female home sewers between the ages of 12 and 55 who had purchased a pattern in the six-month period July-December, 1975. The survey was conducted by in-home personal interviews in 30 metropolitan areas which are projectable to the total metropolitan areas of the country, accounting for 70% of the population of the United States.

Sales figures are unofficial.

Unless otherwise noted, rates of dividends in the foregoing table are annual disbursements based on the last quarterly or semi-annual declaration. Special or extra dividends or payments not designated as regular are identified in the following footnotes.

a—Also extra or extras. b—Annual rate plus stock dividend. c—Liquidating dividend. e—Declared or paid in preceding 12 months. i—Declared or paid after stock dividend or split up. j—Paid this year, dividend omitted, deferred or no action taken at last dividend meeting. k—Declared or paid this year, an accumulative issue with dividends in arrears. n—New issue. r—Declared or paid in preceding 12 months plus stock dividend. t—Paid in stock in preceding 12 months, estimated cash value on ex-dividend or ex-distribution date.

x—Ex-dividend or ex-rights. y—Ex-dividend and sales in full. z—Sales in full.

cld—Called. wd—When distributed. wi—When issued. ww—With warrants. xw—Without warrants. xdis—Ex-distribution.

vj—In bankruptcy or receivership or being reorganized under the Bankruptcy Act, or securities assumed by such companies.

Year's high and low range does not include changes in latest day's trading.

Where a split or stock dividend amounting to 25 per cent or more has been paid the year's high-low range and dividend are shown for the new stock only.

The stock opened the next day at 10:01 A.M. with orders of 5,000 and 3,400 shares at a price set by Mr. Haas—as part of his function as specialist—of 57, or 1⅞ points below the day before. By 10:04, the panel said, the stock stood at 57¼.

The opening price of 57, it said, was the low for the day. It closed that day at 57⅞ on a volume 41,000 shares.

"The opening of a stock is a critical moment in each trading day," the panel observed, "and therefore, the determination of the opening price should not be hasty but should represent a considered appraisal of all relevant factors."

The panel said that, as part of his function of handling orders left with him at specific prices by other brokers, Mr. Haas executed, at $57 a share, several so-called stop orders to sell at prices ranging from 58½ down to 57 ⅜. Designed to stop losses, such orders, left with specialists to be placed at a specific price, are filled immediately after the price hits or falls below the specified price.

However, the panel found, Mr. Haas purchased stock from the first 5,000-share block, thus, in effect, participating in a transaction whose price he arranged, without the approval of a floor official. Mr. Haas was fined $15,000 for failing to maintain an orderly market and $3,000 for participating in the election of the stop orders.

The panel said Mr. Haas might have consulted with others on determining the opening price, waited a few minutes before permitting the stock to open to gain "a clearer picture," investigated any large buying or selling interests and indicated an opening price. He did not use any of these techniques, the exchange said.

The panel said that Mr. Haas believed it would be "better to have the market open off and then recover than to have the market open higher than 57 but drop substantically afterward." It said he contended he "had to anticipate what the subsequent market would be and he thought that a higher opening (price) would leave a great deal of sell stop orders remaining (to be filled)" and possibly cause "a precipitous decline."

Big Board Block Volume Up

Large-block volume on the New York Stock Exchange rose last month to the highest percentage of total trading since June of 1973, the exchange said yesterday. Large-block volume in May, the exchange said, stood at 68.6 million shares or 19.3 percent of total trading, with an average of 160 blocks traded daily in that month. Block volume in June of 1973 totaled 17.3 percent of total volume at the time, the exchange said.

1977. In the shorter term, the primary and Presidential election uncertainties are having some effort on the market."

A total of 1,848 issues were traded yesterday against 1,834 on Wednesday. There were 656 issues that posted gains—100 less than a day earlier—and 704 that showed declines—58 more than on Wednesday. Four hundred and eighty-eight issues were unchanged. New 1976 highs were posted by 66 stocks—twice Wednesday's level—and 43 hit new lows—7 more than a day earlier.

Oil Issues Strongest

As in Wednesday's trading, oil issues were among the strongest groups. Kerr-McGee gained 1⅛ to 74½; Continental Oil, 1⅜ to 36¾; Mountain Fuel Supply, 1¼ to 41⅜; Phillips Petroleum, 1½ to 59⅜; Standard Oil of Ohio, 1½ to 74½, and Superior Oil, 2½ to 168½.

Gold issues were weak after the International Monetary Fund sold 780,000 ounces at $126 an ounce. ASA fell ½ to 25; Dome Mines, ¾ to 44½, and Homestake Mining, ⅝ to 40⅜. Campbell Red Lake Mines closed unchanged at 25.

Auto issues continued strong after the forecast of continued higher production in June. Ford gained ⅞ to 56⅝ and General Motors added ⅛ to 68¾. Chrysler was unchanged at 20⅛ and American Motors was unchanged at 5¼.

The most active list showed issues on the upside, three down and three unchanged.

Block trades highlighted the two most active issues. Beatrice Foods topped the list with a turnover of 277,900 shares as it gained ⅝ to close at 25⅞. International Flavors and Fragrances fell 1¼ to 21⅛ on a turnover of 253,600 shares. Two blocks accounted for more than 200,000 shares of trading in this issue.

Proler Steel fell 3¾ to 44¼ after reporting sharply lower April-quarter earnings.

Sea Containers gained 2⅜ to 22 after it announced plans for raising its dividend.

Pound Falls to $1.71 Despite Support Buying

LONDON, JUNE 3 (UPI)—The British pound, battered by a new selling wave on world money markets, dropped 2½ cents today to a low of $1.70 before it recovered a bit to close at $1.71125.

Reports that the Bank of England was buying sterling in an effort to buoy it pushed the pound briefly to $1.7210. Then a new selling wave hit and it fell to $1.7085 before steadying.

Sterling's depreciation in relation to its major trading partners widened to 41.4 percent, meaning its value has dropped this much since the Smithsonian Agreement of 1971, which allowed for floating exchange rates.

A "don't panic" appeal by Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey yesterday evening failed to help the pound as the Government had hoped.

One rumor sweeping money markets was that the Government might close foreign-exchange markets temporarily at the beginning of next week, but there was no confirmation.

Banking sources said the Bank of England was stepping in only briefly and intermittently to buy pounds in an effort to stem the selling tide.

The chief reason for the limited intervention they said, was that the bank's own reserves were falling dramatically and its ability to intervene was diminishing.

A dealer for Barclays Bank said there were rumors that the Treasury had ordered the Bank of England to hold the line at $1.70 at all costs. "Today's slight improvement indicates this may be so," he said.

But with the nation's reserves now down to a little over $5 billion, financial experts said the bank could do little to halt the run on the pound.

The pound opened today at $1.7020—a drop of two cents on yesterday's closing figure of $1.72.

Swiss Intervene for Dollar

ZURICH Switzerland, June 3 (UPI) — Switzerland's national bank intervened on what currency dealers called an unprecedented scale today as the dollar fell momentarily to a low against the Swiss franc.

"We don't know exactly how many dollars the national bank was buying, but it can be called a massive and even unprecedented intervention," one leading Swiss dealer said.

Dealers in Zurich said the bank stepped in after the dollar sank from yesterday's 16-month low of 2.3890 francs to 2.3815, a record low.

The action immediately buoyed the dollar to 2.4180 francs, although it had slipped back to 2.4115 when markets closed.

Franc in Demand

The dollar has been declining in Zurich for days, but dealers and bankers said it resulted not from weakness of the dollar but from a persistent demand for the franc, which is considered Europe's strongest currency.

"There is little or nothing we can do to stop the incredible demand for Swiss francs. There are simply too many dollars in circulation and not enough francs," one banker said.

Other major currencies also continued to weaken against Switzerland's franc. The French franc was valued at just one-half of a Swiss franc, while the British pound was down to 4.12 francs. The pound was worth 10 francs a decade ago. The West German mark was quoted at just .92 francs — 92 Swiss francs for 100 marks — at interbank rates.

Dollar Generally Up

The dollar also decined slightly in Frankfurt, from 2.5850 marks to 2.5820, but it rose on other continental markets.

In Paris it was up from 4.7270 francs to 4.7300, in Brussels from 40.15 francs to 40.265, in Amsterdam from 2.7430 guilders to 2.7450, and in Milan it was at a 20-day high of 847.30, compared with the previous close of 845.45.

The price of gold was up 20 cents in Zurich at $127.25 and up 25 cents in London at $127.-375.

ACCOUNTING UNIT DEFERS PROPOSAL

Plan Would Adjust Company Reports for Inflation

By CLARE M. RECKERT

The Financial Accounting Standards Board said yesterday that it had decided to defer indefinitely its earlier proposal concerning the issuing of additional figures to show the effect of inflation on financial statements.

Fifteen months ago the board requested comments on an "exposure draft" that would have required corporations to supply with their conventional financial statements a set of figures adjusted for changes in the general purchasing power of the dollar.

The figures would have been adjusted by using the gross national product implicit price deflator as the basic index. The G.N.P. deflator, the broadest measure of inflation, was 8.8 percent last year. It was at an annual rate of 3.5 percent in this year's first quarter.

A large number of companies participated in the analysis of the draft, the board said, and the American Petroleum Institute made available to the board its composite report of the field tests of 20 companies. The board also received 476 letters of comment on the proposal.

In deciding to defer further consideration of inflation accounting at this time, the board said it had not reached a conclusion one way or the other about the merits of providing financial information adjusted for inflation.

The board said it found that companies and analysts did not seem to understand how to use the inflation-adjusted data, and it said the cost of "implementation upon those preparing financial statements" did not appear warranted.

Furthermore, it was noted that rules of the Securities and Exchange Commission required companies to provide the current replacement cost data for inventories and productive capacity.

The S.E.C. "properly observes that the two approaches are not competitive and suggests that some registrates may wish to use data regarding changes in the general price level as part of the analysis of reasons for changes in replacement costs," the board added.

The accounting standards board said it would issue a second memorandum on the project presenting its tentative conclusions about the objects of financial statements; the elements of such statements including assets, liabilities, capital, revenues, expenses and earnings, and the measurement of various attributes of those elements of financial accounting including figures of historical costs, current replacement costs, current market value, net realizable value and present value of expected cash flows.

Economist Suggests U.S. Seek Surveillance of Exchange Rates

WASHINGTON, June 3 (Reuters)—The economist C. Fred Bergsten said today that the United States should push hard to establish effective surveillance over the exchange rate system to protect itself from the actions of other countries.

In testimony before a House Banking subcommittee, Mr. Bergsten, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, cited the performance of the Japanese yen, the British pound and Italian lira as examples of the weakness in the current system.

'Japan is likely to run the largest trade surplus in its history this year, yet has been buying dollars massively for the last five months to keep the exchange rate of the yen from rising significantly and thus hurting its competitive position," Mr. Bergsten said.

"The British and Italian depreciations almost certainly exceeded the amounts justified by their underlying competitive positions, enhancing their trade balances, and there is strong evidence that Britain deliberately pushed its rate down to achieve just such an advantage," he said.

Mr. Bergsten did not elaborate in his testimony on what actions he thought Britain had taken to push down its exchange rate.

However, in a telephone interview, he said that just before the beginning of sterling's sharp decline Britain lowered the minimum lending rate and sold some sterling on the market for the account of other

"Both were signals for the market that they wanted a lower rate," he said.

Houston Oil Is Lower

The most active issue on the Amex was Houston Oil and Minerals, which dropped 3½ to 59¾ on a turnover of 149,500 shares, including several blocks. The company said it knew of no corporate reason for the decline in the stock or the heavy activity.

The Nolex Corporation fell 1⅛ to 7⅛. The company yesterday reported that the Securities and Exchange Commission is conducting an investigation concerning certain transactions in the company's stock. Nolex said the investigation centered on transactions undertaken during the course of the development of the company's new milk carton.

The Milton Roy Company's stock gained ½ to 20½ after the company said its new soft contact lens should experience "substantial sales" this year but only "modest earnings" because to start-up costs.

Dresdner Bank, your international partner reports on 1975

- 22 per cent growth in group business volume
- extraordinary international expansion

The extension of Dresdner Bank in the past few years with new branches, offices and affiliations throughout the world resulted in a considerable increase in business.

Dresdner Bank expanded its international activities despite shrinking world trade. The outstanding performance of Dresdner Bank's subsidiaries made a major contribution to the bank's business development.
The Compagnie Luxembourgeoise de Banque SA (CLB) with an increased activity of 50 per cent – principally in international credit and monetary transactions – deserves special mention. Deutsch-Südamerikanische Bank (DSB), specializing in financing trade with Latin America, increased its business volume to over 3 billion DM.

Cooperation with our partner banks in the Associated Banks of Europe Corporation SA (ABECOR) was steadily intensified. ABECOR with a total of 400 billion DM bank assets is the largest international group of this kind.

With a background of 100 years of experience in international banking Dresdner Bank is active all over the world in more than 50 countries.

Branches in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, London, Singapore, Tokyo, Panama (DSB).

Representative offices in Asunción, Beirut, Bogotá, Buenos Aires, Cairo, Caracas, Istanbul, Johannesburg, La Paz, Lima, Madrid, Mexico, Montevideo, Moscow, Panama, Paris, Quito, Rio de Janeiro, Santiago de Chile, São Paulo, Sydney, Tehran.

Call on us at Dresdner Bank. You'll find the international banking partner your business needs.

Advertising

A Time Inc. Women's Magazine?

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

Time Inc. is giving serious consideration to entering the women's magazine field to broaden the corporation's advertising base, Kelso Sutton, editor of its magazine development group, said today.

Until People magazine was introduced, he told clients and staff of Young & Rubicam at an agency-conducted seminar at the Pierre Hotel, the publishing company did not have a magazine that could attract advertisers in such women-oriented fields as cosmetics, toiletries and personal-care items.

This is not the first time the corporation has considered a women's magazine, he said. Even before Life was published, the idea had been kicked around, but the news-oriented management headed by Henry Luce, the company's founder, finally discarded it.

Besides People, the magazines that Time Inc. currently publishes are Time, Sports Illustrated, Fortune and Money.

Mr. Sutton was asked how many women's magazines there are and why Time feels there is a gap it could fill. He estimated that there are "something like 60 really targeted to women." As to the gap, he cited research showing that college-educated women read an average of 10 magazines a month—twice the male average. "It's a terrific market," he said.

"We have the strong feeling that there has been a revolution for women—not shrill or loud but pervasive and big. And we don't think the magazines are doing the job that has to be done."

The company's magazine development group, Mr. Sutton said, looks at magazine acquisition and point ventures and reviews two or three new magazine ideas a week from inside and outside sources.

Among its criteria for the proposed magazine: It must have strong support from a wide group of readers on the youngish side, it must not be dependent on the United States Postal Service for distribution, it must have a title that is attractive no only to current advertising clients of Time Inc. but also to prospective clients and it must have a fast payback.

A big treat after lunch was the appearance — as one friendly unified group—of the presidents of all three television networks: James E. Duffy of ABC, Robert T. Howard of NBC and Robert J. Wussler of CBS. They talked about improving television programming, the need for businessmen to speak up to the press to improve the image of business and—yes—about the zooming costs of the medium.

Mr. Duffy said that cost-per-thousand advertising rates on networks were at their highest ever because of the supply and demand situation and the fact that advertisers increasingly understand the worth of the medium. Up to now TV has been underpriced, he said. (A few in the audience tittered.)

Mr. Wussler said he saw no hope of prices coming down not only because of strong demand but also because of the constant increases of programming costs.

The last speaker of the day was Alex Kroll, executive vice president of Young & Rubican. He followed the fabled Barbara Walters, who talked about what's on women's minds today.

Mr. Kroll reported on a Roper study conducted at the agency's behest into what consumers think about truth and about truth in advertising.

When the nationally projectable sample was asked if they could remember seeing a deceptive ad, half said they could, and 28 percent said they had been deceived into buying the product.

"They were not the poor, the black and the old," Mr. Kroll said. He noted that they included more women than men, usually middle income people, and that they tended to be Midwesterners from small towns. Middle America, in other words.

One out of two could recall an ad they considered useful, and usually it was because they had seen the product in action.

The person who makes an ad, Mr. Kroll concluded, must be willing to bring it home and show it to the kids and not be afraid that any of the loved ones would copy what is being done by the people in the ads; must feel equally at ease showing it personally to everyone on the client side or to the competition and must be quite willing to sign it.

"Truth," said the kindly philosopher of adland, "is cheaper than fiction."

Soil Assignment

Sawden & Bess has an interesting new assignment when you consider the booming national interest in indoor and outdoor plants.

Mother Earth Industries has asked the agency to take care of a new product, Mother Earth Supersoil, a fortified natural organic soil. Spot television will be used in selective markets this summer, and hopes are for a national rollout in the autumn.

Meanwhile, Earle Bower Associates, a two-month-old agency started by a former senior vice president at PKL Advertising, has been retained by the C.B. Fleet Company to develop consumer advertising for the Fleet Enema.

People

Betty Friedman is joining F. William Free & Company as a senior vice president-creative director.

David Steinberg has been named president of PR Newswire Association, a Western Union Teleprocessing division.

Gerald H. Blum has been named a senior vice president of Lord & Taylor.

Daniel J. Moriarty has been elected a corporate vice president of Max Factor & Company.

Doner Takes On Banana Account

The Detroit office of W. B. Doner & Company has been named the advertising agency for United Brands' Chiquita Brands' bananas. The billings are believed to be about $5 million a year. The current agency is Young & Rubicam, which last October lost the Canadian part of the business to Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn but will retain the European segment.

Doner, which also has a Baltimore office, claims to represent more supermarket chains than any other agency. That certainly is a strength when it comes to marketing bananas.

A whisper was heard in the marketplace yesterday that Doner also had another strength—that its president was a brother-in-law of Max M. Fisher, chairman of United Brands since 1975.

Stanley T. Burkoff, the president of the agency, is married to the sister of Mr. Fisher's wife. A spokesman for the agency said that, although Mr. Fisher might have introduced United to Doner a year ago he had nothing to do with the agency's selection.

Actually, the spokesman said, Mr. Fisher had a relationship with Doner back in the 1950's when it was the agency for his Speedway 79 gasoline. In those days Mr. Burkoff was at another agency—Young & Rubicam, as a matter of fact.

Antitrust Bill Filibuster Ends; Senate Passage Seen Probable

breaking of the filibuster. The Senate's Republicans split almost evenly on the cloture vote, with 16 voting to shut off debate and 15 voting not to.

In a more typical instance where liberal-conservative lines were sharply drawn, as they generally are on antitrust issues, a heavy majority of the Republicans would probably have voted against breaking the filibuster.

Dozens of Amendments

It appeared almost certain that the bill would pass the Senate, although probably not until Monday because there were dozens of amendments still to be offered and because opponents of the basic bill were insisting on roll-call votes on most of the amendments.

Probably the most important amendment adopted today was one that would permit a state legislature to prohibit a state attorney general from bringing the types of damage suits that are authorized by the bill.

The damage suit section of the bill has passed the House of Representatives, in somewhat different form. Counterparts of the other sections of the bill are pending at various stages in the House.

It was not yet clear whether the House would attempt to pass the other section before a House-Senate conference on the bills. It would be legally possible, though not necessarily politically practicable, for the House to accept a conference bill that contained sections that had not previously been before the House.

Senate Vote on Limiting Debate on Antitrust Bill

In return, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which saved the bank from closing in 1972 by giving it a $35.5 million emergency loan, agreed to extend the loan to April 1987. The loan had originally been scheduled to mature next April, and the bank had no prospect of repaying it.

Mr. Trued was installed as chairman at the behest of Mr. Pharaon after the abrupt resignation of Commonwealth's president, Arthur F. F. Snyder, in January.

Mr. Pharaon, who bought control of the bank from the James T. Barnes family of Detroit 16 months ago, last week made his first public appearance in the Detroit area since his purchase.

Mr. Pharaon, who says he is Saudi Arabia's largest general contractor, said he felt his sizable investment — about $10 million to the Barnes family, plus probable purchases of part of the new stock—would pay off handsomely in the long run.

Under terms of the F.D.I.C. agreement, the stock cannot pay dividends until the F.D.I.C. has been repaid in full. But Mr. Pharaon, 36 years old, said he was interested in long-term capital gains, not short-term dividends.

His confidence was in marked contrast to his attitude during an interview in the F.D.I.C.'s offices last May.

At the time, Mr. Pharaon he might not have bought the bank had he known its true situation. He said that, since Commonwealth's troubles had become known in Saudi Arabia, "a lot of people have questioned my wisdom."

In 1974 and 1975, Commonwealth was hit by large losses in its loan portfolio. This year, the bank says its loan problems are under control but that it cannot earn a profit because the spread between its cost of funds and return on its investment is not large enough. The bank says it hopes to earn money as interest rates rise, which would increase the yield in some of its loans.

Mr. Pharaon said in May that he had not conducted a detailed investigation of the bank before purchasing it, and had not talked to any of its executives lest news of his interest in the bank leak out.

Both the new Mercure and the new version of the 737 would be powered by the CFM-56 engine, which France's state-owned Snias Company is building in cooperation with the General Electric Company.

The French interest in an aircraft partnership with the United States has aroused some controversy. It has been seen in London as a slap at British and European technological cooperation. "It would smack of that perfidy of which the French sometimes accuse the British," The London Financial Times commented.

The International Business Machines Corporation has been seen as another possible target for Frenchification, but Mr. Kornblum noted that the French lack leverage with this giant, which controls more than 60 percent of the French computer market.

"I.B.M.'s conduct in France has been perfect," the Ministry of Industry officer observed. "It has created employment and followed an active research policy here. We can only praise I.B.M."

In evaluating the new French industrial policies, American diplomatic and corporate officials say they do not like aspects that smack of nationalism. But American companies, on the whole, do not seem too unhappy with the developments.

One reason is that while pressure has been put on American companies to cede share interests, the companies are fully compensated. And some, like Westinghouse, according to industry sources, needed the money.

Westinghouse has taken large losses in Europe trying to break into the market for elevators in apartment and office buildings, the sources pointed out. And so, they added, it was not unfavorably disposed, when the French exerted pressure, to negotiate the sale of a large block of stock in Framatome, the company that holds most of the technology for building nuclear power stations.

In reducing its stock ownership of Framatome from 45 to 15 percent, Westinghouse got some $25 million. The stock was sold to the French Atomic Energy Commission.

Honeywell received $60 million for the sale of 19 percent of its stock in Honeywell Bull. This paved the way for a complex transaction in which Honeywell Bull is to merge with Compagnies Internationale pour l'Informatique, a concern founded during the deGaulle period to provide a purely French capability in computers.

Honeywell retains a 47 percent interest in the merged company, which is now expected to get a sizable amount of Government data processing orders. The independent French nuclear strike force is especially dependent upon computer technology, which is one reason why the Government wanted control in French hands.

Moving into the sector with a 19 percent stake in the merged company is Compagnie Générale d'Eléctricité, which becomes the dominant stockholder on the French side.

Honeywell, Westinghouse and more recently I.T.T. were all told that if they wanted to participate in future French growth markets, they could do so only by lessening their industrial presence. I.T.T. sold its 68 percent interest in Le Matériel Téléphonique to a French electrical giant, Thomson CSF for $160 million.

I.T.T. retains, however, another wholly owned subsidiary in France, which was promised sizable Government telephone business if the sale was consummated.

Similar tactics were used with Sweden's L. M. Ericsson Company, which was asked to surrender control of its French subsidiary, also to Thomson.

The French Government has now lived up to its end of the bargain by announcing that the switching equipment to be used in modernizing the telephone system—on which altogether some $20 billion will be spent over the next five years—will be supplied by I.T.T. and Ericsson.

In providing a rationale for the Government policy, Mr. Kornblum says that in computers, nuclear energy and telecommunications the Government intends to finance heavy research spending over the next decade. He notes that it would be impossible to accelerate the research efforts if the major units were American-controlled. "We still think there can be a fruitful exchange with the Americans," he adds.

But some American observers wonder how willing "Frenchified" American companies will be to make new research efforts in France in the future.

New Rising Gas Tax Is Urged

A former United States Ambassador to Saudi Arabia, James E. Akins, proposed yesterday the gradual application of a new Federal gasoline consumer tax that would reach $1 a gallon by 1990 as the only way to force production of more energy-efficient cars.

Mr. Akins, who now is a Washington energy consultant, said that this country must begin oil conservation because it would be dependent on oil imports for the rest of the century. Testifying before a subcommittee of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, he predicted that the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would run out of oil in 25 years.

Paul McCracken, a former president of the Council of Economic Advisers, disputed yesterday recent official figures indicating an 8.5 percent annual growth rate in this country's gross national product.

He said that real growth of G.N.P.—the value of all goods and services—was running at an annual rate of 5 percent. He contended that a rundown of inventories in the last quarter of 1975 and a buildup of stocks in the first quarter of this year had inflated the growth figures.

The former Presidential adviser made his comments at a news conference in Geneva, where he is attending the annual assembly of the International Savings Banks Institute. He described 5 percent growth as "a solid rate of expansion" and added that there was no need for concern over any "overheating of the American economy.

In a series of senior management changes, Lewis T. Preston and John P. Schroeder have been elected vice chairmen and directors of J. P. Morgan & Company, and of its subsidiary, the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York, effective July 1. Both are now executive vice presidents.

Mr. Preston, who is 49, heads the international banking division; Mr. Schroeder, 57, heads the national banking division. With their election, it was announced that Thomas Rodd and DeWitt Peterkin Jr., both of whom are 62, will retire as vice chairmen and directors at the end of this year. They will serve as senior management advisers until mid-1978.

Mr. Kenzie, who is 44, succeeds Thomas J. Cassady, 55, who became president and chief administrative officer of the brokerage firm in top-management promotions involving also the parent company, Merrill Lynch & Company.

Other executives named in a realignment of responsibilities in the brokerage were: William A. Schreyer, 48, chairman and chief executive officer for government securities, who becomes executive vice president for capital markets, a new position; Allan L. Sher, 44, a regional vice president, who succeeds Mr. Kenzie, and Edward F. Ryan, 54, a senior vice president and chief financial officer, who succeeds Mr. Schreyer.

In addition to the promotion of Mr. Cassady, another top management change announced Wednesday included the appointment of Roger E. B. P. PROFIT DOWN 51.9% IN QUARTER

Performance Is Poorest of International Oil Concerns

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

The British Petroleum Company, one of the world's major international oil concerns, reported yesterday a 51.9 percent decline in first-quarter net income to $39 million, or 10 cents a share, from $81 million, or 21 cents, in the similar period a year ago.

Net revenues of the company, which is 48.2 percent owned by the British Government, rose to $4.57 billion from $3.62 billion last year.

B.P.'s performance in the quarter was the poorest of the major international oil companies. Most of the others showed profit increases with earnings from operations in the United States showing better margins than those elsewhere.

The company said its crude oil sales were down by 14.8 percent, while sales of products and chemicals showed an improvement of 9.6 percent.

B.P. said that although the decline in crude oil sales contributed to the reduction in profits, a more serious factor was the losses incurred on product sales in many areas of Europe. "These losses have been aggravated in sterling terms as a result of the fall of the value of the pound," the company said.

New York Business: Executive Shuffle

performance has frustrated the owners' desire to "look good in New York."

The effect has been an eager, almost desperate, effort by parent companies to change faces in the top posts. The race to attract new talent and the results of the executive changes have led to a variety of developments.

The retail industry's biggest package of remuneration and fringes is approximately $2.5 million. This was assembled by Brown & Williamson Industries, owners of Saks Fifth Avenue and Gimbel Brothers Inc. since 1973, to lure Mr. Suslow, president of the Famous-Barr department store company in St. Louis, to become Saks' president, effective last Tuesday.

But the offer was reputedly only a little more than that dangled late last year by Genesco Inc. to secure a new chairman for its troubled Bonwit Teller subsidiary. As a result, John Schumacher left his post as chairman of I. Magnin, the Los Angeles specialty store chain, to become Bonwit's chairman and group president of Genesco's women's apparel retailing activities.

Ironically, several efforts to lure a top retailer away has led to his own employer's promoting him to keep him. When Altman's sought for its presidency Angelo Arena, executive vice president of the Emporium, a San Francisco department store, he was promoted by its parent company, Carter Hawley Hale Stores, to the Emporium's presidency. Later last winter, when Saks tried to get Mr. Arena for its presidency, he was promoted again—to the chairmanship of Neiman-Marcus, also owned by Carter Hawley Hale.

That post at Neiman-Marcus was open because Richard Hauser, its chairman, was himself offered the Saks job. To demonstrate its eagerness to retain him, however, Carter Hawley Hale promoted Mr. Hauser to the presidency of its big Broadway department stores division in Los Angeles.

Major changes have followed in the wake of the executive shuffles. At Macy's Abraham & Straus, Lord & Taylor and Gimbels, substantial expenditures have been made to remodel the main and upper floors. Striving to recover or increase their market share, these retailers are refining their approaches to make a more definite impact on the shopping public.

Competition has sharpened in emphasizing both price and fashion. Joseph E. Brooks, who left the presidency of Filene's in Boston to become the $250,000-a-year chairman of Lord & Taylor, has injected a strong contemporary fashion element in that chain to compete with the major Fifth Avenue stores, Bloomingdale's and the boutiques. Also, under their new chiefs, the New York divisions of Macy and Gimbel have launched twin programs of strong "value" and fashion promotion.

Although few retailers wish to be quoted on the executive shifts, an examination of most of the changes confirms the belief that most of them resulted from a desire for improvement in sales and especially earnings.

At Macy's, Edward S. Finkelstein who had a successful record as president of Macy's California, was brought to New York as head of that Macy division, which corporate management itself had said was "having problems."

Mr. Brooks was lured to New York from Boston because the Associated Dry Goods Corporation, the parent company of Lord & Taylor, was dissatisfied with Lord & Taylor's performance.

Similar reasons account, according to qualified trade sources, for other changes. These include the appointment of Mr. Schumacher at Bonwit, who promptly lured Kal Ruttenstein from a top post at Saks to become Bonwit's president; a shift by Ira Neimark from Altman's executive vice presidency to the presidency of Bergdorf Goodman, and the selection of Martin Kramer, a top executive at the Allied Stores Corporation, to be chairman of Gimbel Brothers.

In other top changes, John W. Christian Jr., left the M. O'Neil Company of Akron, Ohio, to become president of B. Altman & Company; Matt ny to the presidency of Gimbels, Pittsburgh, was transferred by the parent company to the presidency of Gimbels, New York, and Sanford J. Zimmerman, president of the Famous-Barr Company of St. Louis was appointed chairman of Abraham & Straus in Brooklyn.

More recently, Alan Gilman was shifted from his post as chairman of Sanger-Harris, the Dallas department store, by Federated Department Stores, its corporate parent, to the presidency of A. & S., also a Federated division, to work with Mr. Zimmerman and reverse its recent record of erratic sales.

Major stores here which haven't changed their principal executives are Bloomingdale's and Korvette. Alexander's Inc. recently appointed Ben Bartel as its chairman, succeeding Milton E. Mermelstein, who resigned the post, but Alexander Farkas remains president and chief executive officer.

The merchandising field has always seen a faster top executive turnover than most other business sectors because of the volatility of shopping seasons and the rise and fall of product categories within each season, said Gerard R. Roche, senior vice president for Eastern operations of Heidrick & Struggles Inc., executive recruiters.

The lush compensation packages created for such retailers as Saks' Mr. Suslow and Bonwit's Mr. Schumacher are said to be offered as lures to overcome two concerns of executives when they take new posts with strong built-in hazards.

One is the insecurity of obtaining incentives based on profits when the company's return to profitability may take an indefinite period of time. The other is the matter of taxes, with a certainty that the income-tax bracket will be above 50 percent. The new packages have been created to offset both of these fears.

U.S. AIDES SCORE ANY OIL BREAKUP

Officials Argue It Would Lead to Higher Prices

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP) —Administration officials testified against breaking up the nation's major oil companies today, saying it would lead to higher prices and still greater dependence on foreign producers.

The Federal Energy Administrator, Frank G. Zarb, said there was no evidence that a breakup "would result in more abundant and more secure oil, at more reasonable prices."

On the contrary, he said economies inherent in large-scale operations would be lost and the restructuring of the industry would be so disruptive that it would "tend to reduce supplies and place upward pressure on prices."

Mr. Zarb and other witnesses at a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing also said that available data failed to support contentions that high prices and high profits resulted from a lack of competition in the industry.

Vote Date Scheduled

The committee is to vote June 15 on a bill, already approved by its antitrust subcommittee, to force the breaking up of the nation's 18 largest oil companies.

The companies would have to be split into separately owned production, transportation or refining and marketing segments.

Mr. Zarb and other officials testified that one likely effect of a breakup was to preclude United States attainment of energy independence in the next decade.

Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense Roger E. Shields said, "The bill would be highly detrimental to the nation's security and its defense in the coming years.

"At best, it will inhibit maximum development of secure energy sources," he said. "At worst, it could unnecessarily increase the risks which we already must face."

Roderick M. Hills, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, said forced divestiture would make it difficult to raise the capital for projects like the Alaska pipeline and offshore exploration and drilling.

While the bill calls for the divestiture to be completed in five years, Mr. Hills said it would take substantially longer and would create a period of uncertainty during which capital could be obtained only at a significantly higher interest cost.

The capital raising capacity of the oil industry would be impeded "at precisely the time that we need as a nation to have immense amounts of new capital devoted to developing new energy supplies," he said.

Payment of the redemption price will be made at the office of Irving Trust Company, One Wall Street, New York, New York 10015, upon presentation and surrender of such Debentures with all coupons, if any, appertaining thereto maturing after July 1, 1976 and from and after said date interest on such Debentures or any portions thereof herein designated for redemption shall cease to accrue.

Coupons maturing on or prior to July 1, 1976 shall remain payable in accordance with their terms and should be presented for payment in the usual manner.

In the case of Debentures to be redeemed in part only, there will be delivered without charge to the holder thereof, at his option, either coupon Debentures or registered Debentures without coupons for the unredeemed balance of the amount of such Debentures. If coupon Debentures are requested, upon the surrender of a registered Debenture, such registered Debenture must be accompanied by a written instrument of transfer in form satisfactory to the Company, duly executed by the registered holder.

Conversion of Debentures Into Common Stock of the Company on or before the Close of Business on June 30, 1976

The Debentures and portions thereof herein designated for redemption are presently convertible into shares of Common Stock of the Company at the conversion rate of 108.13 shares for each U.S. $1,000.00 principal amount of Debentures. The right to convert such Debentures and portions thereof into Common Stock of the Company will terminate at the close of business on June 30, 1976, in accordance with the terms of the Indenture under which such Debentures were issued. At any time on or prior to June 30, 1976, the holder of any such Debenture or portion thereof may, upon the terms and conditions provided in the Indenture, elect to convert all or, a portion of the principal amount thereof which is U.S. $1,000.00 or an integral multiple of U.S. $1,000.00 into fully paid and nonassessable shares of Common Stock of the Company. In order to exercise such conversion right, the holder of any Debenture or portion thereof to be converted shall surrender such Debenture or portion thereof, together with all unmatured coupons, if any, appertaining thereto, and in the case of registered Debentures, accompanied by a written instrument or instruments of transfer in form satisfactory to the Company duly executed by the registered holder, at the office or agency of the Company in Mexico City, Federal District, Mexico, together with a written notice to the effect that such holder elects to convert such Debenture or portion thereof.

781 of 1,250 Applicants Pass Bar Examination

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, June 3—The State Board of Law Examiners announced today the names of 781 applicants who passed the examination for admission to the bar given last March 8 and 9.

A total of 1,250 applicants took the test. Of these, 440 took the examination for the first time, and of this group, 288 passed.

Of the 781 successful candidates, 662 have been certified to the Appellate Divisions of State Supreme Court in the various judicial departments. The candidates remaining will be certified after they have filed proof of full compliance with the Court of Appeals.

Each certified applicant must appear before the Committee on Character and Fitness for further examination.

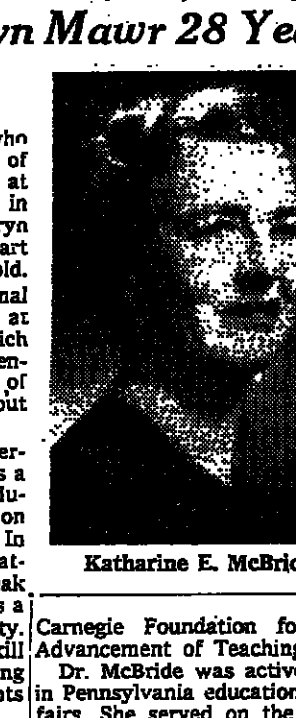
Katharine McBride, 72, Dies; Headed Bryn Mawr 28 Years

By MORRIS KAPLAN



Katharine E. McBride

Katharine E. McBride, who became the fourth president of Bryn Mawr College in 1942 at the age of 37 and retired in 1970, died yesterday in Bryn Mawr (Pa.) Hospital of a heart ailment. She was 72 years old.

Dr. McBride rose to national prominence as an educator at the women's college, which doubled in size during her tenure to its current enrollment of 1,600 students, including about 900 undergraduates.

During the 1960's, she determined that specialization was a necessary part of a liberal education, with jobs dependent on highly concentrated training. In the preceding decade, she attacked the reluctance to speak out on controversial issues as a threat to a democratic society. And she urged Congress to kill a provision in the law calling for loyalty oaths from students getting Federal scholarships.

A native of Philadelphia, Miss McBride attended the Germantown Friends School and was graduated cum laude from Bryn Mawr in 1925. She received her Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy degrees there and became a lecturer in the department of psychology in 1935.

Dean at Radcliffe

She engaged in research and clinical psychology at Bryn Mawr, Columbia University and in several Philadelphia hospitals under a grant from the Commonwealth Fund and resigned as associate professor of psychology in 1940 to accept the deanship at Radcliffe College. She returned to the Bryn Mawr campus after two years to become president, succeeding Marion Edwards Park.

Twenty three colleges and universities honored Dr. McBride with honorary degrees as she expanded her role in American education. She held the chairmanship of the College Entrance Examination Board from 1949 to 1952, the American Council on Education, 1955 to 1956, and the Educational Testing Service at various intervals from 1947 to 1964.

She was a member of the Committee on Education Beyond the High School during the Eisenhower Administration. From 1967 to 1973, she was a member of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education.

She also served on the board of the National Science Foundation, the National Advisory Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases Council of the National Institutes of Health and the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

Dr. McBride was active also in Pennsylvania educational affairs. She served on the State Board of Education and the State Council of Higher Education. In 1952, she became the first woman trustee of the University of Pennsylvania.

In 1960, she received the M. Carey Thomas Prize of $5,000 commemorating the 75th anniversary of Bryn Mawr in recognition of eminent achievement. And in 1961, she received the 29th annual Gimbel award for "outstanding contributions to the field of education for women."

Last February, she was honored with the Edward S. Noyes Award for outstanding service to the College Entrance Examination Board of New York.

Wrote 2 Books

Dr. McBride was the author, in collaboration with Dr. Theodore Weisenberg of "Asphasia, a Clinical and Psychological Study," published in 1935 and, with Dr. Weisenberg and Dr. Anne Roe, of "Adult Intelligence," published in 1936.

She was a fellow of the American Psychological Association and a member of the American Association of University Women and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. She was a director of the New York Life Insurance Company and of the Philadelphia Savings Fund Society. In 1970, she was elected a director of Rider College, in Lawrenceville, N.J.

Two nieces are her sole survivors. There will be a private funeral service at 10:30 A.M., tomorrow at the West Laurel Hill cemetery chapel. A memorial service is planned at the college in the fall.

GEORGE BUCK, LED WATER COMPANY

Engineer and Ex-Chairman of Hackensack Group Dies

George H. Buck, former chairman of the board and president of the Hackensack Water Company, died yesterday at the Pascack Valley Hospital in Westwood, N. J. He was 81 years old and lived in Fort Lee, N. J.

Mr. Buck was also a consulting engineer and a senior member of the engineering concern of Buck, Seifert & Jost of Englewood Cliffs, N. J. The concern specialized in waterworks and sanitary engineering for more than 500 municipalities, state authorities and foreign government agencies.

Mr. Buck was credited with a major expansion of the Hackensack Water Company, both in its plant facilities and its total operating revenues. He was president of the company from 1950 until his resignation in 1973, when he was elected board chairman. He resigned that post in 1975, but remained a director until last month.

He was a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Buck is survived by his wife, Loretto Buck; a son, George H. Buck Jr., and a grandson.

LEO BRONSTEIN, 72, FINE ARTS AUTHOR

Leo Bronstein, an author and a retired professor of fine arts, died Tuesday in Strasbourg, France, after being run over by a motorcycle. He was 72 years old and lived at 210 West 101st Street.

Professor Bronstein was born in Poland and earned his doctorate at the Sorbonne in Paris before coming to the United States in 1932. He joined the Brandeis University faculty in 1952 as a lecturer and was promoted to full professor in 1961. He retired from the school in 1967 as professor fine arts.

He was associated for a number of years with the Asia Institute, and, as director of its documentary survey, compiled a volume of source material on Islamic history, which is now in Fogg Museum at Harvard University.

He was the author of several books on art, written in both French and English. Among them were "El Greco (Domenicos Theocopoulos)," published in 1950, and "Fragments of Life, Metaphysics and Art," published in 1953. His two books in French were "Altichiero," and "Lutte et Réconciliations," both published in Paris.

He is survived by his brother.

Dr. Dushkin, who was born in Russia and emigrated to the United States in 1902, was one of the leaders of Jewish education.

After studying at City College, Dr. Dushkin received his doctorate in 1917 at Teachers College, Columbia University. From 1921 to 1949 he directed the Bureau of Jewish Education in Chicago. With the establishment of Israel, he went to Jerusalem to found the John Dewey School.

He was the author of "Living Bridges," a history of Jewish education.

Surviving are two daughters, Kinereth Gensler of Boston and Avima Lombard of Jerusalem; two brothers, Samuel of New York City and David of Weston, Vt.; a sister, Eva Kassan of Haifa, Israel, and six grandchildren.

Alton A. Lessard Is Dead; Headed Democrats in Maine

Special to The New York Times

FALMOUTH, Me., June 3—Alton A. Lessard, a retired Superior Court justice who was one of the architects in the rejuvenation of the Democratic Party in Maine, died in his sleep here early today. He was 66 years old.

In 1958 Mr. Lessard, as chairman of the Democratic State Committee, led the party when it won a United States Senate seat for the first time in more than 40 years with the election of Edmund S. Muskie. The Democrats also won the Governor's office and two of the then three House seats.

Mr. Lessard had served as United States Attorney for Maine and in 1965 he was appointed to the Maine Superior Court. He retired in 1974.

Donald Feitel, Executive Of News Feature Service

Donald G. Feitel, editorial director of Metropolitan Sunday Newspapers Inc., died of cancer yesterday at his home in Pelham Manor, N.Y. He was 50 years old.

Mr. Feitel began his journalism career at the company in 1949 as a reporter. In 1964 he became editorial director, making assignments and organizing feature material used by the Sunday magazines of newspapers subscribing to the service.

He was a member of the Overseas Press Club of America and the American Association of Sunday and Feature Editors. Mr. Feitel was the author of "Successful Free Lancing" published in 1958.

He is survived by his wife, Barbara, two sons, Thomas E. and Charles D., and a daughter, Elizabeth L.

Coast Guard Aids Russian

COOS BAY, Ore., June 3 (AP)—A Coast Guard helicopter has plucked an ailing Russian seaman from a ship off the Oregon coast and transported him to an Oregon hospital for treatment, a Coast Guard spokesman reported. A spokesman in the Seattle Coast Guard office said that the copter had lifted Olge Yakushin, 42 years old, from the Ordzhonikidze. He has a kidney ailment.

MICHAEL A. RAFFAELE

Michael A. Raffaele, former assistant general foreman of the composing room at The New York Times, died yesterday in St. John's Hospital in Yonkers. He was 67 years old and lived in the Riverdale section of the Bronx.

Mr. Raffaele retired in 1971 after 28 years with The Times.

He is survived by his wife, Florence; two daughters; two sisters, and two grandsons.

House Committee Approves $5 Billion Foreign Aid Bill

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP)—The House Appropriations Committee today approved a $5 billion foreign aid bill, including $2.6 billion for the Middle East, for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

In an accompanying report, the committee directed federal agencies to take stronger action to prevent contractors from participating in a Arab boycott against Israel.

It threatened to impose requirements by law if the agencies did not voluntarily notify all United States foreign-aid contractors that they could not abide by any Arab boycott restrictions.

pointed to financial trouble at the Klein house, had telephoned around the neighborhood looking for part-time work.

One of the few people in Greenwich who did know Mrs. Klein was Howard Jordan, who works in the advertising department of the local newspaper, Greenwich Time, and sold a number of classified ads to Mrs. Klein promoting her services.

"She came in one day and said she was looking for a job," he recalled today. "She said she didn't need the money, but wanted to keep busy. She was trying to keep busy but not in a society kind of way. She was more a New York or Long Island kind of person."

Mr. Jordan said that Mrs. Klein had recently spent eight months as an advertising marketing and promotion director for New York apparel manufacturing firm, perhaps her husband's.

"She bounced from one thing to another," he said.

off," Mr. D'Amato said. "There were just tons of sludge everywhere."

Buried under the sludge, his head barely visible, was young Rickey. Mr. D'Amato said that Mr. Ramberg disrobed and dived into the sludge to rescue the boy. The other two men then threw a rope and slowly pulled them out of the quagmire, according to the supervisor.

"The boy was gasping for breath and if we had lost another few minutes we might have lost him forever," Mr. D'Amato said.

By this time, a police boat had arrived and the unconscious youth was taken to the mainland where a police helicopter was rushed to the Nassau County Medical Center in East Meadow, L. I., where he was reported in critical condition today in an intensive care unit.

Meanwhile, county officials and representatives from the Town of Hempstead and the State Department of Environmental Conservation used helicopters today to spray this area against mosquitoes. Barges pumped the residual sludge from the tanks here and dumped it 15 miles away in the ocean. Officials estimated that the damage to the tanks and the cost of the cleanup operations would total at last $3 million, but they declined to say when the beaches would be reopened.

At the East Meadow Hospital tonight, the family of the rescued youth stood by, hoping for his recovery. And in Island Park, Mr. Nicholas's relatives waited grimly for news likely to bring them more grief.

Jews Begin Celebration Of Shabuoth Holiday

Shabuoth, the Jewish holiday commemorated the giving of the Ten Commandments, began at sundown yesterday with observances in synagogues.

The holiday, which is also known as the Feast of Weeks, is mentioned in the Bible as the time when the first fruits of the spring planting appear. Reform Jews celebrate for one day and Orthodox and Conservative Jews for two.

Rabbi Walter S. Wurzburger, the president of the Rabbinical Council of America, said in a message that the survival "of civilization hinges upon man's ability to recognize the ethnic norms and moral principles of the Ten Commandments."

Limnologist Uses Stream as Living Lab for Study of Water Life

the students walked back to the Stroud laboratory building, took their boots off and prepared slides of stream water samples for microscopic examination.

Moving from scope to scope, Dr. Patrick quickly identified the organisms when a student was stumped, reacting spiritedly ("Oh, there's a cladophora!") when a species of her favorites, the diatoms, appeared. When magnified 440 times some kinds of diatoms resembled tiny boats that occasionally bumped into each other.

Hinged Pillboxes

Diatoms range in length from one micron (one millionth of a meter) to a millimeter in length and are constructed somewhat like hinged pillboxes. Their shapes vary from thin rods to oval and pancakelike forms. The thousands of separate species are identified by differences in size, shape and the infinitely tiny radial lines, ridges, spines, hairs and nodules on the organisms.

Dr. Patrick became interested in diatoms at a tender age. Her father, Frank Patrick, a lawyer by trade and a biologist by avocation, was an admirer of the tiny diatoms, often called the "gems of the sea." As a treat for his daughter he would lift her onto his lap and let her peer through his microscope at the jewel-like forms. "I was hooked on diatoms at the age of seven," Dr. Patrick remarked.

Pursuing her interest into maturity, she got her masters and Ph.D. degree in biology at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville. She began her affiliation with the Academy of Natural Sciences (which had the best collection of diatoms in America) in 1933 and in 1947 established and headed its limnology department.

Diatoms Are Mined

Historically, diatom remains have been scientifically useful in charting the advance and retreat of glaciers and in tracing the prehistoric conditions of ancient lakes. In some sections of the world, huge deposits of the dead plants constitute diatomaceous earth and are mined commercially for use in thermal insulation and ultra-fine filters, as filter for paints and plastics and as a polishing agent for lenses and mirrors.

Live diatoms are at the bottom of the food web, where they provide a vital part of the diet of tiny insects, mollusks and fish, providing essential vitamins and other nutrients.

In the eyes of Dr. Patrick and other limnologists, living diatoms now have another important use for mankind, for they play a key role in helping to combat the earth's most serious pollution problem — the contamination of its oceans, lakes and streams.

A few decades ago it was generally known among aquatic scientists that a few kinds of diatoms seemed to favor certain types of water environment. With her extensive knowledge of the different types of diatoms, Dr. Patrick set out in 1948 to correlate these relationships more precisely.

In the company of a team of scientists, including a chemist, a bacteriologist and animal and plant experts, Dr. Patrick examined a Pennsylvania stream, Conestoga Creek, for basic data on the diatom-environment relationship.

The creek, a small river that winds through Lancaster County, was considered classic for their purpose — it suffered from almost all known types of pollution: sewage, fertilizer and pesticide runoff, metals from heavy industry and toxic substances.

The scientists mapped the various sections of the river and its streambed according to the various types of pollution and then identified the types of plant and animal communities found in each of those sections. Dr. Patrick found that some diatom species thrived in water that was heavily polluted with organic contaminants such as human sewage, animal manure and crop fertilizers. Others flourished in pollutants of a different nature, such as mineral or chemical.

Index of Pollution

By linking up the specific kinds of diatoms with the specific kind of water environment they thrived in or were absent from, it became possible to determine the type of pollution simply by examining and classifying the diatoms found in a stream.

Further refining this system, Dr. Patrick learned to examine a sample of stream water under the microscope and determine from the types and numbers of diatoms present not only what kind of pollution was present but how severe it was.

To make the collection of diatoms easier, Dr. Patrick invented the diatometer, a plastic box containing microscope slides that, strategically placed in a stream, capture the maximum number of the organisms. These devices are now in more than 70 sites in the United States as monitors of water pollution.

Won Richest Prize

Dr. Patrick's research on diatoms and streams has taken her to bodies of water in Canada, South America, Ireland, Mexico, Thailand, Austria and almost every part of the United States. Recently she has worked at the Stroud laboratory on the role of trace elements in the nourishment of diatoms.

For her work in these fields and her published studies of diatom taxonomy (classification), Dr. Patrick last year was awarded the $150,000 John and Alice Tyler Ecology Award — the world's richest prize for scientific achievement.

Dr. Patrick, who uses her maiden name professionally, lives in a tree-shaded home in Chestnut Hill with her husband, Dr. Charles Hodge, a retired entomologist, and her son, Charles, a medical student at Temple University.

She is eager to give up her job as chairman of the board of the Academy of Natural Sciences. "I want to get back to research full time," she said.

Dr. Patrick, in cooperation with Rutgers University, is currently studying the effects of petroleum in estuaries of the Delaware River, research that is supported by the petroleum industry.

Financial support from industry for part of her research work plus the fact that she is on the boards of duPont and the Pennsylvania Power and Light Company, have elevated the eyebrows of some scientists who feel that scientific water pollution research should not be funded by industries that themselves are polluters.

But Dr. Patrick, who feels that she had to work harder and longer than her male peers to reach her present eminence, believes in "being involved with the people who are causing the problems."

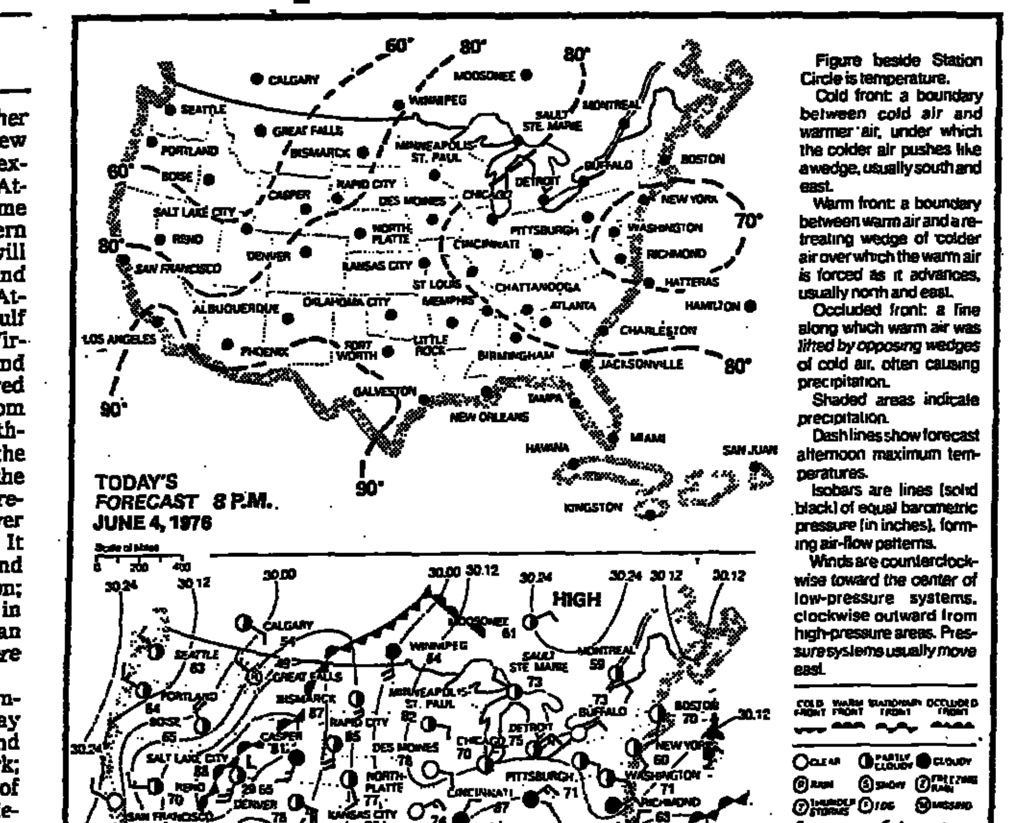
In an interview, she remarked, "Industry has got to face up to the truth — they've got to be willing to admit it when they do something wrong. We have to develop an atmosphere where the industrialist trusts the scientist and the scientist trusts the industrialist."

Weather Reports and Forecast

Summary

Sunny and mild weather is forecast today for New England. Fair skies are expected over the Middle Atlantic States, although some rain may develop in southern Virginia. Thundershowers will continue from Tennessee and Kentucky into the South Atlantic States and eastern Gulf Coast; it will be cool in Virginia and North Carolina, and warm in Florida. Scattered showers will occur from western portion of the Northern Plains States across the northern Rockies into the northern intermountain region. Sunny skies will cover the rest of the country. It will be cool in Montana and the northern plateau region; warm weather is expected in Colorado, and from Michigan into the Dakotas. Elsewhere mild weather will prevail.

Sunny skies and mild temperatures occurred yesterday over southern New England and Metropolitan New York; clouds covered the rest of New England as showers developed in northern areas. Thunderstorms were scattered from the lower Ohio Valley and southern Virginia to the South Atlantic States, Gulf Coast and eastern Alabama; other thunderstorms also occurred in the southern portions of Mississippi and Louisiana. Thundershowers ended across the Plains States early in the day, although rain continued in northwestern Montana and eastern Idaho; thundershowers were also reported in southwestern Montana and the southern Rockies. Skies were generally fair in the Far West.



Forecast

National Weather Service (As of 11 P.M.)

NEW YORK CITY—Partly cloudy today, high in the low to mid-70's, winds variable less than 10 miles per hour today, and southeasterly 10 to 15 m.p.h. this afternoon and tonight; fair tonight, low in the mid-50's. Sunny and pleasant tomorrow. Precipitation probability 20 percent today and tonight.

NORTH JERSEY AND ROCKLAND AND WESTCHESTER COUNTIES—Partly cloudy today, high in low to mid-70's but lower along the coast; fair tonight, low in the low to mid-50's. Sunny and pleasant tomorrow.

LONG ISLAND AND LONG ISLAND SOUND—Partly cloudy today, high in the low 60's along the south shore and eastern end, and the low 70's elsewhere, winds variable less than 10 miles per hour today, and southeasterly 10 to 15 m.p.h. this afternoon and tonight; fair tonight with patchy fog developing, low in the upper 40's to low 50's. Sunny and pleasant tomorrow. Visibility on the Sound two to four miles in haze and patchy fog early today and late tonight, otherwise five miles or better today and tonight.

SOUTH JERSEY AND EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA—Mostly sunny today, high from the mid-60's along the coast to the 70's inland; fair tonight, low in the mid-40's to low 50's. Mostly sunny and continued mild tomorrow.

INTERIOR EASTERN NEW YORK AND VERMONT—Mostly sunny today, high in the 70's to near 80; fair tonight, low in the upper 40's to mid-50's. Sunny and warmer tomorrow.

CONNECTICUT, RHODE ISLAND AND MASSACHUSETTS—Mostly sunny today, high from the 60's along the coast to the 70's to low 80's inland; fair tonight, low in the 40's to low 50's. Mostly sunny and continued mild tomorrow.

NEW HAMPSHIRE AND MAINE—Fair and near seasonable through tomorrow; high today in the 70's, low tonight in the 40's.

Extended Forecast

(Sunday through Tuesday)

METROPOLITAN NEW YORK, LONG ISLAND AND NORTH JERSEY—Fair and seasonably warm throughout the period; daytime highs will average in the upper 70's to low 80's, while overnight lows average in the upper 50's to low 60's.

Guidelines Set for County Home On Taking In Comatose Patients

By JOSEPH F. SULLIVAN

Special to The New York Times

MORRIS PLAINS, N.J., June 3—The Morris County Welfare Board adopted guidelines today for the admission of comatose patients to the county-operated Morris View Nursing Home, amid speculation that Karen Anne Quinlan may be moved there from St. Clare's Hospital in Denville.

The guidelines, which were adopted "on a trial basis only," require that all parties connected with the care of a comatose patient agree "that recovery is not anticipated" and that "aggressive treatment of any acute intervening medical problem is inappropriate."

The board refused to comment on reports that it had been contacted by officials at St. Clare's Hospital concerning the transfer of Miss Quinlan. Before the public meeting, members met behind closed doors to discuss new applications, and said later that they were forbidden by law to discuss any patients or applicants by name.

Miss Quinlan, 22 years old, went into a coma on April 15, 1975, and doctors who have treated her say she will not recover.

Virginia Herbst, chairman of the Welfare Board, said that until now the decisions concerning admission of comatose patients had been left up to Dr. Richard M. Watson, director of medical services in Morris View.

"We just wanted it more adequately defined," she said, of today's action.

Celeste Kalina, the County Welfare Director, said that no comatose patients had been admitted to Morris View in the past because none had matched the guidelines used by Dr. Watson.

Dr. Watson said the guidelines require that, to be admitted, a patient would have had to be in a coma for at least six months if the condition was due to a trauma or some unknown cause, or three months if due to a stroke or brain tumor. Miss Quinlan has been in a coma for more than 13 months from a trauma attributed to the ingestion of tranquilizers and alcoholic beverages.

Dr. Watson also said that the admission of a comatose patient would depend "upon the ability of this institution to provide proper care of the applicant in terms of available equipment and staff."

Mrs. Kalina said that the Morris View nursing home intended to establish an ethics committee as a medical advisory body. The State Supreme Court, which established guidelines for the withdrawal of a supportive "medical system" from Miss Quinlan so that she could be allowed to die, decreed that an ethics committee or similar agency at the institution where she was a patient would first have to agree that her condition is hopeless.

Tax Bill Provision Held Curbing Press On Exposing I.R.S.

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 3—A group representing taxpayers charged today that a provision had been put into the pending tax bill under which journalists could be fined and imprisoned for exposing wrongdoing by the Internal Revenue Service.

The charge was made by Taxation With Representation, which calls itself a public interest taxpayers lobby. The bill is before the Senate Finance Committee, which last week added an amendment that would make "wilfull receipt" of confidential tax information a felony, punishable by a $5,000 fine or five years imprisonment, or both.

According to Thomas Field, director of Taxation With Representation, the amendment defines confidential tax information so broadly that "substantially all" information in the hands of the I.R.S. would be considered confidential and thus covered by the amendment's criminal penalties.

Recent examples of news articles for which a reporter, editor or publisher could be jailed under the amendment, according to Mr. Field, include the disclosure that Donald C. Alexander, the I.R.S. commissioner, personally ordered the agency to shelve a criminal investigation of the tax returns of Senator Joseph M. Montoya, Democrat of New Mexico.

Mr. Field said that the I.R.S. had proposed amendment language to Congress. It was presented to the Senate committee as a staff proposal of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, which had worked it out with the I.R.S.

WHAT IS THE APARTMENT LIFE?

From "What Is the Club Med Really Like?" Septem

Well, it's not hanging around the house all the tin

Apartment people get out and go. They fly to the Caribbean to swim, or to Colorado to ski. Or drive themselves to fun anywhere. They don't have to spend money and time on lawnmowers or roofing or fixing the furnace. So they spend money and time on their good life—the Apartment Life. Two million two hundred thousand of these young, well-educated, affluent people spend money and time on something else, too: A magazine called Apartment Life.
They do it because we give them ideas for living the way they want to live. And we know the way they live.
